TIME FOR PEACE MOVE, POPE TELLS WILSON

FIERCE DRIVE ON CURLEY'S POLICY

Storrow Says Chief Executive Would Use $350,000 Needed for Streets to Build Up Machine

Charges Mayor's Plan to Increase City Hall Payrolls Is Move for Political Power

"More Money Needed for Labor and Less for Politicians," He Says; "Crucial Test for Council"

James J. Storrow declared in a speech before the Twentieth Century Club yesterday, that Mayor Curley was planning to take $350,000 which should be spent in street improvements and seeking to spend it on payrolls to buy political support, to build up his political machine to advance his political fortunes.

It was a most vigorous attack which the City Councillor hurled at the Mayor. Mr. Storrow said:

Boston needs more money for labor and less money for politicians at City Hall.

We must have more money for our streets. This can be obtained by asking city officials already reasonably well paid to forego for the coming year the increases the Mayor is planning, not for the benefit of the citizens as a whole but primarily to build up his political machine.

REAL TEST OF COURAGE.

The action taken by the Council in the matter of checking the growth of the payrolls will be a real test of the courage of the members.

This coming week will show what the attitude of the Council on this great abuse is going to be. It is comparatively easy to check unwarranted loans, because they hit nobody in particular.

It requires little courage to reduce unwarranted expenditures for materials, because this hits at most a very few people interested in selling these materials to the city; but when it comes to arresting the constant tendency to take money from street work and use it for unnecessary padding of payrolls, it brings the members of the Council face to face with a question which requires more courage than any question which this new Council has ever been called upon to deal with since it was created.

Under the new city charter the Mayor is given great executive power. He alone appoints all heads of departments without the necessity of consulting the City Council. In the old days the confirmation of these appointments was one of the important duties of the Board of Aldermen.

This power under the new charter is taken away from the Council. I think probably wisely, so that the Mayor has sole and undivided responsibility for the executive management of the City of Boston and the citizens of Boston know just who to praise if the administration of the city is conducted according to their liking, and just who to blame, if it is not.

RENDERED GREAT SERVICE.

The new Council has already rendered the city great service by stopping this onrush to bankruptcy. There is no question that in 1909 the city of Boston's growth and prosperity were seriously

MRS. PATRICK TULLY, who yesterday appealed to the city authorities for food and shelter; and her two children, William Patrick Tully and Mary Florence Tully.

ELOPING HEIRESS MAY DIE

By International News Service.

New York, May 6.—Mrs. "Al" Davis, formerly Eugenia Kelly, eloping heiress of the late Eugene Kelly, was probably mortally injured today when she was thrown from a high-spirited horse near her home in Jericho, L. I.

Three physicians, two of them specialists, are attending her. It was said she is suffering from a fractured skull and possible internal injuries.

Not until evening did Mrs. Davis regain consciousness long enough to recognize those at her bedside. Her mother, Mrs. Helen M. Kelly, was not notified of the accident.

Soon after 3 o'clock Mrs. Davis left her home on a thoroughbred hunter. She was seen to pass the Jericho Hotel along the Hicksville road by G. F. Bennett. Three quarters of an hour afterward Bennett saw the riderless horse returning at break-neck speed. The animal stopped at the hotel and then ran into the stable.

Calling Thomas M. Morson, proprietor of the hotel, and several other men, Bennett ran back along the road. A quarter of a mile distance they found Mrs. Davis. She was unconscious and there was a gash extending across the top of her head from the forehead to the base of the skull.

Davis was communicated with by telephone. With C. E. Brooke of New York, who was spending the week-end at the Davis home, he hurried to the scene in his automobile. The injured woman was placed in the machine and taken home. Physicians were summoned.

The cause of the accident is not definitely known.

Mrs. Patrick Tully Comes 3,000-Mile Journey in Hope of Help From Rich Relative.

A young, refined and stylishly gowned woman claiming to be Mrs. Patrick Tully, and a niece of William M. Wood, the millionaire mill owner, and president of the American Woolen Company, appealed to the Boston public authorities for aid yesterday because, she said, her two little children were threatened with starvation, and she herself feared arrest because of unpaid board bills. She was accompanied by her children.

The authorities hesitated about sending her to the almshouse, and she spent the night with the family of the janitor of City Hall. Reporters adjusted her bills with the proprietors of two prominent hotels.

Mrs. Tully told an affecting story of a journey of 3,000 miles across the continent from Marshfield, Oregon, with her two children, to seek aid from her uncle, when she found she was not legally wedded to the father of her children. She said she was barred from her uncle's Back Bay home at the corner of Commonwealth avenue and Fairfield street, because of religion and the unfortunate marriage.

Mr. Wood was located at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, last night and sent the following telegram to the Boston AMERICAN.

Boston.

I have nothing to do with Mrs. Tully.

WILLIAM M. WOOD.

REFUSED FURTHER AID.

Mrs. Wood admitted to an employe at City Hall that her husband had recently refused to aid Mrs. Tully. Mrs. Wood said:

"Yes, Mr. Wood has a niece by this name, and she came here a few days ago. My husband told me he refused to aid her any more."

"Have you any suggestion, Mrs. Wood, what disposition the authorities should make of her and her two little children, who, it is claimed, are destitute?"

Harvard Professor Calls for Vigorous Foreign Policy; "Little Action; Millions of Words"

Convention Declares for Old Principles and Elects Delegates Pledged to Former President

The Progressive Party of Massachusetts held its State Convention in Faneuil Hall yesterday afternoon, elected delegates to the Bull Moose National Convention in Chicago, endorsed Theodore Roosevelt for President, cheered his name vociferously and applauded speeches for Roosevelt and preparedness.

Resolutions indorsing Colonel Roosevelt for President, pledging the party to military, industrial and social preparedness, and reaffirming the Progressives principles of 1912 were unanimously adopted. The resolutions:

THE MAN FOR THE CRISIS.

Resolved, That the Progressive Party of Massachusetts, in State convention assembled, hereby reaffirms its allegiance to the fundamental principles as set forth in our national platform of 1912.

Resolved, That we stand for the principle of preparedness as set forth by our great leader, Theodore Roosevelt.

And we call particular attention to the fundamental principle that we cannot be thoroughly prepared to defend our national honor and his vital interests without maintaining social and industrial justice, thereby making the interest of the citizen identical with those of his government.

Resolved, That we indorse for nomination for President by the national convention at Chicago the man best fitted to guide the nation through the critical period our country is now facing—Theodore Roosevelt.

Professor Albert Bushnell Hart, who holds the chair of government at Harvard and who was permanent chairman of the convention, sounded the keynote in his speech demanding "a vigorous foreign policy." He spoke of "millions of words exchanged" and "little done."

"We need an armament and we need a man that would have the courage to use it," declared Professor Hart.

Matthew Hale, chairman of the Progressive State Committee and temporary chairman of the convention, said that preparedness was not an end, but a means to an end, that a change of emphasis must not be a change of principle and that the Progressive party was still fighting for social and industrial justice.

ELECT WOMAN SECRETARY.

The convention assembled at 2 o'clock with 347 delegates, including twenty-five women, present on credentials. This was regarded as a splendid showing. Prayer was offered by the Rev. George L. Perin.

Mrs. Harriett L. Kennedy of Boston was elected secretary of the convention.

Mr. Hale, the temporary chairman, said in part:

"While we are thus working for preparedness and national honor and for Roosevelt for President, let us always bear in mind that this is a change of emphasis and not a change of principle. Let us bear in mind two vital and fundamental facts, and let us see to it that our country bears them in mind.

"If the first place, preparedness does not connote safety of armies and navies. We must never forget that the greatest and most vital problem of preparedness is to see that the people of the nation are devoted to the nation, and that every class and every race in this country feel that it is a real and vital part of the United States, and this result can only be reached by giving to every

CARRANZA ATTACK ON PERSHING PLANNED

Obregon's Lieutenant Declares Hostile Drive Will Be Made Soon Unless U. S. Withdraws

Howze's Men Surprise Villa Band in Camp; 42 Killed in Battle That Follows; No Americans Hurt

By EDMOND BEHR.
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

El Paso, Tex., May 6.—Carranza forces will attack General Pershing's men in a few days unless the American's announce their intention to withdraw from Mexico at once.

This is the opinion of Colonel F. E. Trevino, brother of General Jacinto Trevino, second in command to General Alvaro Obregon.

Carranza sent a message to General Obregon tonight, informing the Mexican Minister of War that he had found the agreement with the United States satisfactory, with the exception of a few minor points. It is now believed that the final conference will be held tomorrow, when the protocol may be signed.

It is believed the First Chief is seeking to force Washington to name a definite time limit for the retention of troops in Mexico.

This report closely followed the news officially reported by General Funston of a battle between Colonel Howze's troopers and Villistas, at Ojo Azules, in which forty-two bandits were slain, many wounded and others taken prisoners. There were no American casualties.

Reports were also received that five Americans had been murdered by bandits in the mining districts between Rosario and Mazatlin.

WILL STRIKE SOON.

Continued delay by General Obregon in signing in the protocol with Major-General Hugh L. Scott gave color to the following statement made today in Juarez by Colonel Trevino:

No power on earth can prevent the Constitutionalist troops in Chihuahua from attacking the Americans soon. General Obregon has been sparing for time to move his army northward, and when the time is ripe he will strike. He was not authorized when he came here to enter an agreement that was not based on the immediate withdrawal of the punitive expedition.

This startling statement shared a leading position in the day's Mexican news with a report of the battle at Ojo Azuls, eighteen miles south of Cusihuiriachic.

General Frederick Funston received an official report of the battle this morning from General Pershing at the advanced base near San Antonio. The Americans suffered no losses in either killed or wounded. The battle showed once again that the hard riding American cavalry can beat the Mexican bandits at their own game of guerilla warfare. Major Howze and his squadron rode thirty-six miles Thursday night and struck the Mexican encampment just before daybreak.

COMPLETE SURPRISE.

The attack was a complete surprise and many of the bandits were slain before they could reach their rifles. The 340 troopers had almost surrounded the sleeping Mexicans when the alarm was given by a sentry guarding the horses. Instantly the order to charge was given and the Americans dashed into the camp, firing as they rode. Rifles were not used until the Mexicans had begun to scatter in the hills. It was a pistol battle—the most spectacular of the campaign in Mexico.

Many of the bandits were shot to death before they could disentangle themselves from the blankets in which they were sleeping when the fight began. There was little thought of organized resistance—only a mad rush to escape.

The band originally numbered about

Warring Nations Open to Proposals, Pontiff Is Informed

Mgr. Bonzano, Papal Delegate, Calls at White House and Delivers Personal Message to President from His Holiness.

By International News Service.

Washington, May 6.—President Wilson today received an important message from Pope Benedict, bearing on the establishment of peace in Europe.

The nature of the message was not discussed, but it is understood the Pope urges President Wilson to suggest negotiations at once. It was stated also he expressed the hope that a break in diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany would not develop.

The communication was delivered by the Rt. Rev. Giovanni Bonzano, apostolic delegate. He called at the White House shortly before 1 o'clock and delivered to Secretary Tumulty a sealed package to be handed to the President.

The Papal delegate did not see the President in person.

The Pope, it is said, was informed by representatives of belligerent countries that the obstacles to peace which had existed up to this time had disappeared. None of the belligerents, it is gathered here, is ready to submit definite terms of peace, but all would consider preliminary suggestions as to a basis for discussion.

GERMAN MOVE FOR PEACE.

There were strong intimations at the State Department that Germany has really made, in the strictest confidence, a definite move toward peace and that the next step will be taken by the United States. It was said the department had received from Ambassador Gerard at Berlin a report on possible peace proposals and terms outlined to Mr. Gerard at his conference with the German Emperor at German headquarters.

It was stated by an official that Mr. Gerard saw the Emperor at the latter's invitation and it is believed here that the principal subject discussed was not Germany's reply to the United States, but the opportunities possessed by this country to serve the world by interesting itself in a timely effort to bring the war to an end.

The German government, it was said, in its reply to the United

Tornado of Shells Believed to Be Part of Move to Impress Neutrals After U-Boat Note

By C. F. BERTELLI.
Staff Correspondent of the International News Service.

Paris, May 6.—Coincident with the reply of the Kaiser to the Wilson note, the Verdun battle has leaped up with far greater fierceness than has characterized it at any time.

A terrific tornado of explosive and poison shells deluges Mort Homme and Hill No. 304, and during the past few days the Crown Prince has launched several divisions of his finest remaining troops, who, during the last few days, have been strongly reinforced against Hill 304, which is two and one-half miles southwest of Mort Homme and 1,000 yards southeast of Haucourt.

The object of this great onslaught was to turn the French at Mort Homme and force a general retreat in this region.

TERRIFIC BOMBARDMENT.

Unspeakably awful was the bombardment of Hill 304, which was followed by six infantry attacks, all of which were repulsed, except the last one, when the Germans succeeded in obtaining a footing on one of the advanced trenches. Everywhere else in this section the French threw back the attackers after an epic bayonet battle, which will live in French military history as an engagement which cost the Germans tremendous losses.

The German tactics show plainly to the French staff that a new offensive

American Consul at London Reports on Recent Submarine Activity by the Germans

Washington, May 6.—The State Department today received from Consul Skinner at London confirmation of attacks by submarines upon four vessels as follows:

British steamer Ruabon, sunk by submarine.

British steamer Clan MacFadden, damaged by submarine in the Bay of Biscay, later arrived in London.

Norwegian vessel Mara set afire by gunfire in the North Sea, May 2. Crew saved.

French Schooner Bernadette, sunk by submarine May 1, 150 miles from land. Eight of crew saved, twenty-six adrift.

The reports were received in London by Lloyds.

A London cable today said:

The Clan McFadden has arrived in Gravesend from Africa somewhat damaged by the gunfire of two German submarines. The steamer returned the fire and it was believed on board that one of the submarines was destroyed.

The steamer reports that the first attack on her was made in the Bay of Biscay, when a submarine fired sixty shots at her at a range of fifty yards. The steamer immediately brought her big gun into action. It hit the submarine several times, and, it is believed, destroyed it.

Three hours later another submarine fired a torpedo but missed the Clan McFadden by a few feet.

BRITAIN SEEKS TO JUSTIFY SIEGE

Lord Cecil Issues Semi-Official Statement in Reply to German Charges in U. S. Note

War Minister Holds England Has Observed Rules of International Law in Conduct of War

Cites Instances in Proof of British Consideration for the Rights of Neutrals

By International News Service.

London, May 6.—Lord Robert Cecil, minister of war, trade and blockade, tonight issued semi-officially a document which may be described as the British reply to the allegations in the German note that the British government does not observe fully the rules of international law as a belligerent nation in regard to the present blockade of Germany.

The statement in effect answers the American declaration in the note of February 14 that the blockade must be confined to ports on the coasts of Great Britain's enemies and avers that no neutrals have suffered by the British activities.

The semi-official declaration further quotes precedents for the British action in holding foodstuffs intended for enemy destination as contraband. Here is the semi-official statement in full:

The reply of the German government to the American note of April 20 respecting submarine warfare is not a communication upon which any general comment can properly be made in this country, as the questions at issue concern the United States and Germany and any interference by a third party would be presumptuous.

Since, however, the German note contains certain misstatements of fact respecting the action of Great Britain, the following observations may not be thought out of place:

QUESTION THE FACTS.

The German government states that they have, as far as possible, instituted far-reaching restraint upon the use of the submarine weapon solely in consideration of the interests of neutrals and in spite of the fact that these restrictions were necessarily of advantage to Germany's enemies. It is alleged that to such consideration ever has been shown to neutrals by Great Britain and her allies.

These facts bear on these assertions? So far as is known the measures taken by Great Britain against German trade have cost no neutral life. Great Britain maintains that they are in accord with principles of international law and is prepared to make good that claim. They can surely compare favorably, insofar as consideration to neutrals is concerned, with the policy whose fruits are seen in the tragedies of the Lusitania, Arabic and Sussex.

The Germans may claim that it is in answer to the illegal conduct of British warfare that Germany was forced to resort to the submarine campaign.

SUBMIT CASES.

This of course is not the first time that the Germans have attempted to justify their submarine warfare on the ground that it is a measure of reprisal

SAYS BRITAIN HAS FOUGHT WITHIN LAW

War Minister Replies to Charges Against England in Germany Note to U. S.

Against the action of the British government in cutting off supplies to Germany.

The following list of incidents in chronological order should suffice to dispose of this plea.

In September of 1914 the Dutch vessel Maria from California to Dublin and Belfast, with a cargo of grain for the civil population, was sunk by the German cruiser Karlsruhe.

On October 26, 1914, the Admiral Gantaume, with 2,000 unarmed refugees aboard, was sunk by a German submarine.

In December, 1914, Admiral von Tirpitz foreshadowed the adoption of the submarine campaign.

On January 27, 1915, the American ship William P. Frye, with wheat from Seattle for Queenstown, was sunk by the German auxiliary cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm.

On February 4, 1915, there was issued the declaration by the German government of their intention to institute a general submarine blockade of Great Britain and Ireland, with the avowed purpose of cutting off all supplies from those islands.

This blockade was put into effect officially on February 14, although, as a matter of fact, a merchant ship had been sunk by a German submarine at the end of January.

HAD DESTROYED FOODS.

It was not until March 11, 1915, that the present measures against German trade were put into force by Great Britain. Before the enforcement of those measures the Germans had destroyed cargoes of foodstuffs coming to the civilian population of this country, had declared their intention of instituting a system of submarine warfare and had actually submarined merchant vessels without warning.

As for their pretended tenderness for non-combatants, their slaughter of old men, children, women and girls in Belgium and Northern France, not to speak of the unprovoked proceedings of their honored allies in Armenia, forever prevents them from being heard in such a cause.

The German government speak of many millions of women and children who, according to the avowed intention of the British government, are to be starved and who, by that means, shall force the victorious army of the Central Powers into ignominious capitulation.

BISMARCK IS QUOTED.

In 1885, at the time when His Majesty's government was discussing with the French the question of the right to declare foodstuffs not intended for the military forces, to be contraband, Prince Bismarck made the following statement to the Kiel Chamber of Commerce:

"I reply to the Chamber of Commerce that any disadvantage our commercial carrying interests may suffer by the treatment of free as contraband of food will not justify our opposing any measure which it has been thought fit to take in carrying on a foreign war. Every war is a calamity which entails evil consequences not only on the combatants, but also to neutrals. The measure in question has for its object the shortening of the war by increasing the difficulties of the enemy and is justifiable to stop the war if unavoidably enforced against any neutrals and their ships.

In 1892 Count Caprivi made the following remarks in the Reichstag in the course of a discussion respecting the question of international protection for private property at sea:

"A country may be dependent for her food on her trade, and upon her trade. In fact, it may be absolutely necessary to destroy the enemy's trade, and the introduction of provisions into Paris was prohibited during the siege, and in the same way a nation would be justified in preventing the imports of food and raw products."

AID GERMANS' RIGHT.

Those other German authorities were right. The truth is that all war is cruel and horrible, but those who have drenched Europe with blood, who scattered death and destruction among combatants and non-combatants by Zeppelin bombs and submarine torpedoes, by their poison gas and flash projectors, who have maimed, tortured and slain millions of the best and bravest of their fellow creatures are presuming too far on the toleration of mankind when they complain of such a comparatively humane method of warfare as a blockade.

Of the German peace overtures—if such they are to be called—little need be said. It was only last December that their Chancellor declared that we believed it to be to our interest to attribute falsely to the peace proposals yet from the German government how say that "wise within the past few months German rule announced before the world her readiness to make peace."

Which is the truth? It may be that the Germans want peace. If so, it is because they fear defeat. It may be only that they want to appear peaceful. For us it matters not. Our attitude, in any rate, is unchanged. We drew the sword unwillingly, we shall sheathe it gladly, but we would be untrue to our trust, we would be betraying civilization, if we abandoned our task until we have re-established in Europe the supremacy of law, the sanctity of treaties and the right of all nations, great and small, to live their lives and fulfil their destiny, free from the intolerable menace of Prussian militarism.

Navy League Files Libel Suit Against Ford for $100,000

Washington, May 6.

THE Navy League of the United States today filed a libel suit against Henry Ford for $100,000 damages in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. In a statement given out today the league asserts that the suit is brought as the result of the publication on May 1, last of a full page advertisement in the Washington Herald by Mr. Ford attacking the Navy League.

HINT PLEDGE BY GERMANS ACCEPTABLE

Submarine Issue Likely to Go Before Cabinet; U. S. May Ignore Verbiage in the Note

By International News Service.

Washington, May 6.—Two important assurances regarding the submarine controversy with Germany were forthcoming today.

From sources close to the President it was learned that the administration is disposed to accept Germany's pledges, but to ignore everything in the note that seems to make them conditional.

At the German embassy it was decided that any condition is attached to Germany's assurances.

In view of these statements, it is accepted as certain that the United States will consider Germany's reply satisfactory ,and that the danger of a diplomatic break has passed.

DENY AMBIGUITIES.

Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, denied today that there is any ambiguity or evasion in the German reply.

A question about which official Washington has been concerned in the last twenty-four hours is whether the phrase in the orders to German submarine commanders "in accordance with the general principles of visit and search and the destruction of merchant vessels, recognized by international law," is subject to reconstruction.

According to the German text, there is not the slightest doubt that the only correct interpretation is that the expression "recognized by international law" referred to principles of visit and search, and not to the character of merchant vessels.

The new instructions issued by the British Admiralty, it was said, are perfectly clear in the original text.

Germany, it was said, had not given the United States assurances in consideration of the United States compelling Great Britain to obey the law, but Germany did have the expectation that Great Britain would be held to observe international law.

Germany, it was said also, had given up retaliation in order to please the United States, although entitled under international law to practice reprisal.

TO DISCUSS DETAILS.

Ambassador von Bernstorff has not been advised yet by Secretary Lansing when the latter would discuss details with him. It is expected that cabinet will consider the German reply at next Tuesday's meeting before any intimation of this government's attitude towards the note is conveyed officially to the German embassy.

President Wilson is making a careful study of the note, which is said to have been written personally by the Kaiser. It was stated by an official close to the President today that he probably would accept the reply as an unconditional assurance by Germany that henceforth she will conduct submarine warfare in strict conformity with the recognized rules of naval warfare.

It was said the President agreed with his advisers that the instructions of Germany to naval commanders are the essence of the reply, and that other features of it, both those which yesterday were thought to hint of a condition and others which seemed to reflect upon the impartiality of the United States, will be ignored by President Wilson.

The President is said to recognize that this government is obliged to accept Germany's instructions to submarine commanders as her plighted word to the United States, and that such a promise must be taken in good faith, and without question.

It is not expected in official circles that President Wilson will order a reply to the German note. It was stated at the German Embassy that the Berlin note did not require an answer. It was believed probable that after President Wilson finally announces his decision to the Cabinet on Tuesday, Secretary Lansing will invite the ambassador for a conference.

If there should still be any question as to what Germany meant in any portion of her reply, Count von Bernstorff would be requested to explain the doubtful passages.

HOSTILE FEELING IN GERMANY.

A high official today said that after the first surprise caused by the tone of the German reply and the exhibition in it of keen disappointment at the attitude of the United States toward Germany as compared with this government's treatment of the allied countries, the feeling today is general that those phases of the note were meant for home consumption.

It was explained that there is strong feeling in Germany concerning the supposed good faith of this government for Great Britain, and equally as strong feeling among the German people that the submarine is a legitimate weapon, and that its operations should not be limited. This sentiment, it was said, had to be appeased.

The German government, it was also declared, was likewise aware that certain expressions in the American note were meant for effect upon the people of the United States.

FRENCH ARMY AT HILL 304 DRIVEN BACK

is pending. This offensive, it is foretold, will be of terrific force, perhaps even greater than the first one in February, against Avocourt.

The titanic struggle for the bloodstained Dead Man Hill is to be repeated at Hill 304, where the Crown Prince evidently has resolved to launch battalion after battalion until he captures the position.

FRENCH CONFIDENCE.

The greatest confidence is felt here, where the new effort to break through is considered only as a political move designed to impress neutrals, and at the same time counteract the effect in Germany of the Kaiser's note to Wilson.

The midnight official communique says:

"During the day the bombardment continued with violence west of the Meuse, principally in the region of Hill No. 304, as far as the edge of the Haucourt-Esnes road. There was no infantry fighting. On the rest of the front there was intermittent artillery fighting.

"The situation of our forces from April 29 to May 6 on the Verdun front:

"The fighting has been without cessation on the left bank of the Meuse. From April 29 to May 3 we extended and consolidated positions on Mort Homme and north of Cumieres by a series of successful actions, at the same time repulsing all German counter attacks. On May 4 and 5, after very violent artillery bombardments and the employment of a new division brought up for reinforcements, the enemy was able to occupy part of our trenches on the northern slopes of Hill No 304.

"On the right bank of the Meuse during this period there was violent artillery fighting, but no infantry actions with the exception of an attack made by our troops on May 1 against the French trenches north of Douaumont fort and very near that position. We occupied the trench. We have identified in this region a new German division.

SURPRISE ATTACKS.

"A number of tentative attacks made by the enemy against our positions in the Vosges, in the Argonne and to the south of the Somme were repulsed easily.

"We have been able by a number of surprise attacks, especially that in the region of Lassigny and in the Argonne on May 5, to take some prisoners.

This is the birthday of the German Crown Prince, and it was expected that the German troops at Verdun would make extraordinary efforts by way of greeting.

Great activity prevails on the British front, especially north and west of Lille, where the British have massed heavy forces and have been persistently attacking in an endeavor to force the Germans from fortification positions, the report says. The two objectives of the British assaults in northern France are apparently Lens and Lille.

Russians Attack Turkish Stronghold

Petrograd, May 6.—Russian troops have attacked the outer defences of Erzingan, the Turkish fortress ninety miles west of Erzerum, and are slowly enveloping the stronghold, according to a dispatch received from Tiflis today. The Turks offered fierce resistance east of Erzingan, but suffered heavy losses and were compelled to fall back upon their main defenses.

The official communication issued by the War Office today follows:

"There was an exchange of fire on the Dvina front. On the sector south of Kreva the violence of the artillery combat diminished during the night of May 4. The enemy delivered violent artillery fire on the Ogrinski Canal, especially in the region of Valiatchine.

"Southeast of Olyka station our troops are making progress and have established themselves in the ground occupied. Enemy counter attacks supported by violent fire failed to succeed, as also did strong enemy attacks, halted by gusts of fire on our trenches in the region of the Tarnopol- Pezerna Railway."

One Ship Sunk in Adriatic Fight

By CAMILLO CIANFARRA,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Rome, May 6.—A squadron of ten Austrian torpedo boats, which were encountered in the Adriatic by four Italian destroyers, were put to flight, it was stated in an official announcement of the Admiralty today.

Brindisi has been bombarded from the air.

Following is the text of the official report.

"On Wednesday in the upper Adriatic four Italian destroyers gave chase to ten Austrian torpedo boats, which fled toward Pola, notly pursued, until larger Austrian units came to the rescue.

"Enemy hydro-aeroplanes vainly attempted to shell our destroyers.

"Yesterday afternoon five Austrian aeroplanes bombarded Ancona. The material damage was slight. The worst damage was suffered by a hospital in which four patients were killed. Five persons were badly wounded elsewhere, and several more were less seriously hurt.

"In the lower Adriatic, the French submarine Bernouilli sank an Austrian destroyer on Friday."

Rome, May 6.—An Austrian torpedo boat destroyer has been sunk in the lower Adriatic by the French submarine Bernouille, according to Turin dispatches today.

Pope Sends Message to Wilson Urging U. S. Start Move for Peace

States demands, desired to put itself on record formally before the world, as it had on two other occasions within the last few months, through announcements made in Berlin, as being "ready to make peace on a basis safeguarding Germany's vital interests, thus indicating that it is not Germany's fault if peace is still withheld from the nations of Europe."

Only one interpretation can be placed on that declaration in Germany's reply, it was declared. It would serve the purpose of a formal authorization from Germany, if the United States should act upon it and approach Great Britain, France and Russia to sound them out.

OUTLINE SPECIFIC TERMS.

It was intimated, further, that Germany had outlined to the United States, through Ambassador Gerard, more specific terms upon which she would be willing to treat for peace than the general assertion that those terms must safeguard Germany's vital interests. It was also said the State Department had kept in most intimate touch, for the last few months especially, with the sentiment toward peace in the warring capitals.

American diplomats at London, Paris and Petrograd, as well as at Berlin and Vienna, have reported conversations they have had with officials on the subject of peace and the terms the various belligerents would be willing to base negotiations upon.

The fact that Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador would neither affirm nor deny that the references to peace contained in the German reply was an invitation to this government to undertake to use its good offices in the interests of a restoration of peace, was construed to mean that Germany had actually proposed such a course to the United States.

An official in close touch with the developments said today that the United States may act at the Pope's suggestion and at Germany's invitation. The first step to be taken by this government looking to the conclusion of the war, he said, would be to ascertain through the entente diplomatic representatives here, or through their foreign offices, whether their countries are willing to consider peace proposals.

ARMISTICE AS FIRST STEP.

If an affirmative answer is received, then this government will present a plan for dispussing a basis on which peace terms might be considered, and, if they are accepted, the next development would be a proposal by the United States that the belligerent countries agree to an armistice, the duration of which would be limited either to a fixed number of days or until the negotiations should be concluded.

It is possible, it was said, the peace conference would be held in the United States, but there is a wide difference of opinion on this point. Many believe it would be in Switzerland, especially if it is called during the Summer, and it is known that Spain is actively seeking to induce the belligerents to hold the congress in Madrid.

It was pointed out today that a visit to Germany of Prince von Buelow, former German ambassador in Rome, the conference of Ambassador Gerard with the German Emperor and the sending of a communication by Pope Benedict to President Wilson, all coming practically together, were timed for a purpose.

Prince von Buelow, it was said, has not been engaged in warlike activities, but wholly with diplomatic negotiations.

He has been practically upon the time in Switzerland, where he has held mysterious conferences of late with the representatives of other countries, who, it is believed here, acted as intermediaries for the entente nations.

It was emphasized that whatever preliminary measures are taken by the United States or Pope Benedict or by Germany or other warring countries would be guarded with great secrecy.

Bernard Shaw Assails British Bluff

"Part of Panic of English Civilians"

"War May Knock Nonsense Out of England and Compel Organization on German Plan"

George Bernard Shaw.

By GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

Some time ago it was gravely stated in a Viennese paper that I had shut myself up in my house, put sentries at my doors, and could show myself in public only on pain of immediate assassination by the infuriated London patriotic mob.

At that time the London newspapers took it for granted England was one solid roar of execration against Keir Hardie, and that the name Ramsay Macdonald was to British patriotism what the name of Judas Iscariot is to Christendom. Never were evil reputations more firmly and unanimously established, so far as the press went.

What were the facts? Keir Hardie died, neither unwept, unhonored, nor unsung. His funeral was like the funeral of Nelson; his obituary notices stand unparalleled for eulogy since the royalist obituaries of Charles I.

Mr. Macdonald was addressing crowded meetings throughout the country, with such standings up and singings of "For he's a jolly good fellow," and salvos of cheers as Mr. Asquith himself can hardly elicit by the most dramatic repetitions of his famous stunt about the terms on which we will sheathe the sword, though that, heaven knows, is ambiguous enough and nonsensical enough to please everybody.

WITHOUT A SIGN OF HOSTILITY.

As for me, I was addressing large open public meetings in London, every week, inviting and answering questions from all comers, about the war or anything else, without a sign of hostility, and rather more than my usual meed of applause, and I was receiving resolutions strongly approving my conduct from the provinces every day.

During the year that followed, my name, according to the London press, was a blasting and a reproach throughout the Empire, and it was current that the sale of my books had completely ceased and that my plays were banished from the stage.

Under this black and white cloud I returned to the platform last October apparently at the risk of being lynched. Yet I live to tell the tale.

Hundreds of persons were turned from the doors of an overcrowded hall; scores of reporters could hardly find room at the press table; two questions only were put to me, both about Jesus Christ; and the next day not a single report of the meeting appeared in the London daily papers, the Press Bureau having suppressed me as completely as it suppressed Lord Willoughby de Broke at the same moment, when he addressed a representative meeting in the city, organized by the Globe, the only two Manchester Guardian and one Liverpool evening paper ran the gauntlet of the censorship and published its reporter's copy.

As to the alleged boycott of my works, I was unfortunate enough to have a sort of war wave of success in disastrous coincidence with the war wave of taxation, the result being that the provision for my old age is being heavily looted by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to fill the war chest.

HAD TO DO ODD LITERARY JOBS FOR COUNTRY.

Nay, at the very time when the London papers assumed I had compromised myself to the extent of being henceforth a negligible quantity, save as an example of infamy, I had to do odd literary jobs for the country, which were put upon me on the flattering ground that I was the only writer whose words would go to the ends of the earth.

I could multiply these instances of the planting out of fools' paradises by the London press. And I could add some examples of the reversal of the process.

For instance, a play denouncing the alleged drunkenness and selfishness of the stokers who were supposed to be responsible for the shortage of shells, had such a huge success in transontine London that its proprietors thought they had acquired a gold mine. In the provinces it had to be withdrawn at once.

And when Mr. Lloyd George took his magic spell over the working classes to the Clyde he could not obtain even a hearing until he had claimed to be a friend of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald and the Socialists had appealed to the audience to give him fair play.

I am not here concerned with the merits of these cases. It may be that Mr. Lloyd George ought to have been carried shoulder-high in triumph through Scotland; that Keir Hardie ought to have been buried at the cross-roads with a stake driven through him; that my work should have been burnt in the Stock Exchange, as the Daily Mail was when that newspaper first had a double set of type to it. "Every German Killed Loss to England and Vice Versa, Many Say in Studying Future that only a little gang of noisy nobodies wanted them to happen. Yet it was assumed that these disorderly persons were the British nation, that their sentiments were the sentiments and ideals of the people, that it was unnecessary as well as unpatriotic even to say a word that was not an echo of their good natured cheering.

GANG OF NOISY NOBODIES TO BLAME.

When a meeting addressed by Mr. Ponsonby at Richmond was broken up, Douglas had to be fired to do it; and as the mobs were not introduced to one another before the fun commenced, they recognized one another as objectionable characters and pummelled each other vigorously save one, who accidentally tackled Mr. Ponsonby and, misunderstanding the motive of the true British pacifism, had his head heartily punched for his pains.

Yet this squalid and ridiculous transaction was reported as if the whole empire had risen and swept an abhorrent traitor into the blind cave of eternal night. Later on, when Mr. Ponsonby, in a debate on the war, made an impotent and impressive speech after Mr. Asquith had made one so bad that even he could not finish it without falling back on the warmest stuff afterward, the papers thought it necessary to garble the report so as to represent Mr. Ponsonby as having paid out a few sentences of incoherent twaddle, beside which even Mr. Asquith's thirteen minutes of thoughtless appeal to an uncommonly common jury appeared almost statesmanlike.

What is the use of all this depressing bluff? It does not frighten the Germans. It does not encourage them; it is, on the contrary, obviously only part of the general panic which has oppressed and distracted our more hysterical civilians ever since the war broke out.

SAME THING GOES ON IN GERMANY.

The same sort of thing goes on in Germany, and the only effect of it on us is to make us feel that a nation which has not stuff enough in it to look everyday facts in the face and snap its fingers at scarecrows will never stick it out if we go on long enough.

When did we first begin to believe in the French army after its stampede from Namur to the gates of Paris? It was when, in the middle of our absurd explanations that the retreat was a successful combination of profound strategy with undying heroism, Joffre electrified us by bluntly saying that the French had disgraced themselves and should not have been beaten at all, and that there was no excuse either for the men or the generals, many of whom he promptly sacked.

At that exhilarating sound of a man talking at last, we turned to him instinctively as the savior of the situation; and since then he has been the only general in the field in whom there is any large and generous faith.

Take the case of our own troops. The distinguishing feature of the campaign is the grim devotion of the officers and men who have gone into the trenches without a ray of illusion as to the moral merits of this monstrous collapse of European civilization. They have given their lives not in the least because they believe that they are fighting the good fight for the claptraps of our press and platform, or because they think that a German is so much worse than an Englishman that the Englishman is entitled to extirpate him as vermin, but solely because when they and their allies are violently attacked they must either be slaughtered like sheep or stand up and fight until the attackers be beaten off and the enemy convinced that it will pay him better to keep on good terms with them.

There are plenty of men in the British trenches, especially in the commissioned ranks, and possibly a majority in the scientific services, who admire the Prussian system.

HAVE NO PATIENCE WITH BRITISH MUDDLE.

The have no patience with British muddle, British slummock, British lazy hatred of order and intellect and learning. Their one hope of any good coming out of the war for their countrymen is that it will knock the nonsense out of them and compel them to organize in the German fashion henceforth.

There are men who have cousins and friends in the German ranks, and whose personal affections are warmly pro-German.

There are men trained as international Socialists, and men of high general intelligence, who are acutely and constantly aware that every German killed is a loss to England and covers Englishmen killed a long to Germany.

There are men who, now that all the belligerents have "given their proofs," as the old dueling phrase ran, are convinced that there is nothing more to be gained by fighting, and that Verdun can only refurbish what Ypres established long ago, and what Loos and Champagne have vainly repeated, that Jean Bloch was right when he said that modern war, between fully armed powers of the first magnitude, can pile up corpses, but cannot achieve decisions.

These self-possessed people are our best soldiers. If they were replaced by the trenches by raving jingo journalists, shrieking for impossible destructions of the enemy today, screaming that all is lost unless the whole plan of campaign is altered to their taste tomorrow, sulking in their tents the day after, and at all times afflicted with such an itch of stupefaction that when they are tired of calling their enemies Huns they cannot refrain from calling their friends spies and traitors, the Germans would not merely win—they would walk over.

DAMON RUNYON TELLS HOW PETER KEENE, OF BABICORA, WAS SLAIN BY MEXICANS

Keene was Bookkeeper at the Hearst Ranch, and He Answered a Summons From Villa and Went to Madera.

Villa Demanded Horses; Keene Refused, Was Killed

By DAMON RUNYON.
Staff Correspondent of the International News Service.

Damon Runyon

Ranch, and a victim of Villa's bloodthirsti outlaws.

A Mexican vaquero, who once worked on the Babicora Ranch and now leading an American column through the mountain fastnesses of Chihuahua, located and identified the grave to-day where the ruthless was passing that way.

The American troopers dismounted and walked patiently in the road at the foot of the mountain while the Mexican spurred his horse up the hill to the little brush-strewn mound, where he knelt reverentially at the grave of Peter Keene. In idle the troops vaquero had known and loved the murdered bookkeeper. As he knelt there he murmured a prayer that the soul of Peter Keene might rest in peace.

"I know the Mexican characteristics," Pater used to argue, when he was keeping the books at the Babicora.

TALK THEM AROUND.

"I grew the character of all the Latin-Americans. All these are all alike. I've spent most of the fifteen years of my life around the Latin republics and I have learned that if you can talk to a Latin a couple of hours, and argue with him, you can bring him around to your way of thinking. I'm not afraid of them. I can who will let me talk to him awhile."

He did not say it boastingly, for he was not a boastful man. On the contrary he was quiet and reticent. He talked little, and moved about little. For months at a time he would not go far away from the offices of the Babicora. Once a week he checked up the cattle and counted the pay rolls. He was a widower. He had a daughter in the States. He was a man of education, and of a kindly disposition. He was the real thief of the boys

CLERK AND HEIRESS IN ROMANCE

Miss Brown, Daughter of Wealthy Gloucester Man, Bride in Auto Elopement to City of Providence

Miss Margaret Brown of Gloucester, daughter of the richest man in that city, except John Hays Hammond, ran away to Providence last week with Raymond Dalton, a young drug store clerk. And they were married, it became known yesterday.

And last night all Gloucester was talking about it! Except the parents of the girl. They refused to be quoted, leaving more or less mystery about the romance.

The story goes back two years, when young Dalton went to Gloucester from his home in Arlington. He went to work in Rogers drug store, on Prospect street.

Miss Brown, daughter of W. G. Brown, whose name stands next on the tax list to that of Mr. Hammond, occasionally dropped into the drug store for one purpose and another not unconnected with the soda fountain.

Miss Brown has her own automobile. A few days ago she drove to Providence, where she has relatives, and Dalton rode with her in the machine and returned with her that day.

Last Wednesday Dalton said to his landlady, "I'm going down to Providence."

The landlady, Mrs. David Presson, jokingly inquired: "Not going to elope, are you?"

And he laughed and said, "Oh, no."

A telephone inquiry to Dalton's home in Arlington brought the information that Dalton was not there, nor was he expected. The inquirer asked:

"You knew of his marriage?"

"Oh, yes," was the answer, and then the conversation was terminated.

Whether Mrs. Dalton will be received with open arms when she returns to her father's home in Gloucester was a matter which many in Gloucester discussed last night.

1,400 at Wellesley Celebrate Merry May Day Revel

Cheer Crowning of King and Queen at Brilliant Scene

Festivities Start Early in Day and Clear Skies Smile on Annual College Celebration.

With the kindly sun pouring down upon the college campus and College Hall Hill, by way of weather variety, 1,400 Wellesley College students yesterday celebrated their most picturesque fete of the year, "The May Day Revel."

And with a comfortable wind blowing across Lake Waban, beneath a clear blue sky, and, further, with the velvet-like campus freshened by the heavy morning rains, the girls, clad in gowns of the flimsy sort, merrily tripped through their various stunts.

The feature of course, was the successful crowning of Alice Clough, president of the freshman class, as Queen of the May, and Rebecca Meaker as King of the May, as King Ahasuerus, and a gay time they had.

Although the rain earlier in the day resulted in the postponement of some of the morning festivities, that in no way dampened the spirits of the girls. The hoop-rolling, the forming of the living class numerals, and the rose-throwing by the freshmen to the seniors will be held tomorrow morning.

START EARLY SCRUBBING.

Yesterday's fun, as usual, started bright and early. At 5:30 a. m. the seniors did their annual scrubbing stunt. They did it in the pouring rain, too.

At 8 a. m. up marched the entire freshman class, most of them in rain-coats, singing the class song. Miss Clough, president of the freshies, presented Rebecca Meaker, senior president, with a huge bouquet of roses.

At 7 p. m. "Cinderella," a Greek tragedy in three acts, was presented by the seniors. Cinderella was the class of 1915, the wicked sisters were the officers of the junior class and the Greek chorus was made up of seniors labeled "freshmen."

After the Prince had rescued Cinderella and the wicked sisters had died, the freshmen, at rain-soaked hens, and drank rain diluted milk.

The big scream came at 2:30 p. m. when the "Nuts" from Nutville, and the "Bugs" from Bugville played a "bear" game of baseball.

According to the umpire the "Nuts" won, 3 to 1. The immense gathering of spectators witnessed the game from the natural grandstand, College Hall Hill.

CROWNING THE QUEEN.

Then came the crowning of the Queen. The Queen, marched majestically to the sloping hill, took a position in the centre of an admiring group, knelt, and was gracefully crowned by Miss Meaker.

Three cheers were given, followed by a grand march around the campus. The girls wearing the prettiest costumes during the march were touched by a wand in the hands of the so-called Alderman, and were rewarded by being allowed to participate in the two Maypole dances which followed.

The pageant representing the Elizabethan age. The costumes were unquestionably the smartest and most attractive of any of the previous May Day revels.

The various colored costumes, the fetching gowns worn by the girls' friends, the natural surroundings, with Tower Court looming up in the background on the site of old College Hall, which was burned, turned the campus into a veritable fairland.

SONG OF THE STEPS.

The day's festivities ended at night with the step singing, the feature being the singing of the freshmen's new step song for the first time, likewise the singing of the crew's song.

Hundreds of parents and friends enjoyed the privileges of the May Day party. Members of the faculty were here and there, attending to each and every want. They enjoyed the "revel" as much as the girls.

A hurdy-gurdy dispensed tunes of the one-step variety. The ice cream cone man worked overtime. The made-up pottevman worked hand-in-hand with the "regular" force, who still wore the White overcoats.

The college correspondents were busy with their new duties, that of acting as chaperones to the newspaper men from Boston. No photographs were allowed to be taken without the sanction of the subject, with the chaperone.

ANDERSON HITS BILL TO REDUCE SERVICE BOARD

United States District Attorney Defends Public Service Commission.

United States District Attorney George W. Anderson, a former member of the Public Service Commission, has come out in opposition to the bill now before the Legislature, providing for a reduction in the number of members of the commission. In a statement made to the Sunday AMERICAN Mr. Anderson said:

"It is proposed by a special committee of the present Legislature to decapitate the present Public Service Commission. No charges are made that the commission is incompetent or unfaithful. If such be the ground for the proposed legislation, on all Anglo-Saxon theories of decency and justice the charges should be openly made and the men attacked should be given a chance to defend themselves.

"Nor is there open attack upon their policies. If this be the ground for the proposed removal, the people of the Commonwealth are entitled to have the opponents of the commission's policies come into the open, and the commissioners are entitled and bound, as public servants, to defend their policies.

"Of course the saving of $18,000 a year is not the real purpose back of this legislation. What is back of it? No responsible citizen or body of citizens has appeared in its favor before a committee of the Legislature.

"Such legislation is destructive of the established policy of the Commonwealth of giving its public servants reasonable terms of office. Without that policy the Commonwealth will not in the future, as in the past, draw freely into its service from the ranks of men competent, independent, public-spirited.

"This proposed legislation is the most brash, irresponsible, revolutionary proposition I have known to emanate from any apparently respectable source in a generation."

CUNARD LINE FACES FROHMAN LUSITANIA SUIT

Administrators Charge Company Failed to Observe Proper Precautions on Trip.

By International News Service.

New York, May 6.—Administrators of the estate of Charles Frohman, who lost his life when the Lusitania was torpedoed one year ago tomorrow, gave notice in the United States District Court today that they intended to sue the Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd.

In the complaint which is to be filed, the plaintiffs, Daniel Frohman and Alfred Hayman, administrators of the theatrical manager, will contend that the steamship company failed to observe the proper precautions to protect the Lusitania from submarines or mines.

The Frohman action, as well as sixteen others filed today, but come within the time limit of one year fixed by Federal law for the beginning of actions to recover for deaths at sea. Six of the actions were in the form of actual complaints, as in the case of the Frohman case, were merely preliminary notices, which, however, are recognized legally as the beginning of the suits.

Altogether forty-three actions have been brought against the Cunard line, twelve of which have already taken the form of complaints. In these twelve cases alone the damages asked amount to more than $1,000,000. No estimate has been made of the damages to be asked in the thirty-one other suits.

The divorce action was entered in Orange County Court, N. H., but that jurisdiction was considered so remote for lawyers and witnesses from Boston that a change of venue was agreed upon to Concord. Young Carpenter has been cared for by the child by order of the New Hampshire courts.

The couple paid penalties to release a discord that first became public when Carpenter seized his son at Bridgeton and Newport last September 7 last and carried him away in an automobile to the Carpenter summer place at Winthrop, N. POLICEMAN IS SHOT AS TEST GOES WRONG

Wounded by Detective While Impersonating Pickpocket at Parade Before Mayor Mitchel

By International News Service.

New York, May 6—In the presence of Mayor Mitchel, Police Commissioner Woods and 2000 other persons at the police parade today, Detective John J. Kilroy shot Policeman Christopher Reilly through the mouth.

The shooting occurred directly in front of the reviewing stand, twenty feet away from Miss Helen Morgan Hamilton, Conspicuous in the Woods fatigue. The parade proper had ended. The mounted men were starting their formation drills.

That the crowds might witness the action of a genuine police thief, who has been training the dogs, was playing the part of a pickpocket. Reilly, who has been a detective sergeant only ten days, did not know the affair was part of the program. He did not recognize Reilly, who was in citizen's clothes.

Weed was supposed to have been passed along the line that Reilly was to have a "mark" selected, so that the dogs were to stop him. But the word reached only a few persons before Reilly arrived at the reviewing stand after the warning was issued.

Police Matron Meredith Durie was stationed at Fifth avenue and Twenty-fifth street, across from the reviewing stand. Reilly brushed past her and snatched her handbag. She set up a scream. At the first screech Reilly began to run across the street diagonally and toward the mayor's box. He had gone thirty feet when one policeman, evidently not in the secret, halted him with a terrific blow on the back of the head.

The police dog promptly ran between the legs of the unidentified man, sprawling him. In accordance with the plan, Reilly drew his revolver and fired two blank cartridges in the dog. The idea was to show that the dog wouldn't stop under fire.

Kilroy then drew his revolver and leaped into the street. Several policemen then ran toward him in an attempt to head him off. Five feet away from Reilly, Kilroy fired—and missed. He fired again. The second shot struck Reilly on the right side of the jaw. The bullet tore out several teeth, pierced the tongue, and stopped just before the left ear.

Since John Quit Drinking

By John's Wife

I'm the happiest little woman,
In all this little town,
And my merry laugh and singing,
Can be heard both night and morn.
For JOHN HAS QUIT HIS DRINKING
And is like himself once more,
And the world is just a paradise
Since he's Quit Demon Rum.

One day I read some verses—
"Mary's Mistake," the name,
And I said, that's John, exactly,
And I'll send and get the same.
So I sent for GOLDEN TREATMENT.
As they would be;
And I put it in John's supper
And I got it in his tea.

And it didn't taste a little bit;
Had no odor, you see—
It was smoothest kind of salting
For Hide Doctor Me.
And I watched and prayed and waited,
And cried some, that I admit,
And I didn't have the greatest faith,
I'm ashamed now to confess,
And John never thought a minute,
He was being cured of drink,
And soon here as well as any one,
It makes me cry to think—
Just takes me cry for gladness,
I'm so proud to be the wife—
Since he is cured of drinking,
And leads a nice, new life.

"Since John Quit Drinking"
I can't say it times enough;
And fates and ladies a Buzz
As he would a potion stuff.
And what I say my prayers at night
As thankful as can be—
I pray for John the cure of all—
Then GOLDEN TREATMENT.

NIECE OF WOOD NOW IN DIRE NEED

Mrs. Patrick Tully Tells How Relatives Refused to Aid Her and Her Children; Asks Help of City who are destitute," asked Mrs. Wood.

They seemed them to be destitute.

"The poor house is good enough for her," answered Mrs. Wood, and the interview was ended.

Mrs. Tully arrived in Boston on Good Friday and registered at a fashionable down-town hotel. The same day she says she saw William Wood at the office of the American Woolen Co., in the National Shawmut Bank Building and that his body guard tried to force her out. Since then she has tried in vain to obtain help from other relatives.

She remained at the hotel until her money gave out and the management took her baggage, she explains.

APPLIES AT CITY HALL.

She sought refuge in another Back Bay hotel, hoping some one would come to her aid. Yesterday when she found that the hotel charge even for one day amounted to nine dollars, and she was penniless, she broke her silence and told her story to the management. They referred her to City Hall.

It was just after two o'clock when Mrs. Tully with her eldest child called at the City Hall. As it was Saturday afternoon the building was closed, so she told her story to Custodian Daniel J. Sheehan and the policeman on guard.

Sheehan located a secretary of the Mayor. The secretary telephoned the office of the American Woolen Company. The man who answered the telephone refused to do anything in the matter. The secretary telephoned again. He was told this time something from the office would call at City Hall. But, according to the policemen, no one called.

Meanwhile the child, William Patrick Tully, four and one-half years old, was crying with hunger. A reporter took him to a nearby restaurant.

Seated at a desk in the office of Mr. Sheehan, surrounded by politicians and policemen, and amid the interruptions of her little boy, Mrs. Tully was finally persuaded to tell her story. She said:

LEARNS ILLEGAL MARRIAGE.

"My maiden name was Alice Beatrice Wood. My father is John Wood. He was born in St. Martha's Vineyard, Mass., and is a brother of William M. Wood. My mother's name is Elizabeth Cosgrove Wood. My father is an invalid, and went West, where I was born.

"From my childhood I was always a favorite with my Uncle William. Up to now he has been most kind and generous. He educated me at Rye, N. Y., at a Dominican convent near San Francisco and at other places. He also helped my father, who is still alive, but very ill, and my mother, who is dead.

"About six years ago, at Los Angeles, Cal., I married Patrick Tully. Our marriage was happy and we never had a quarrel. My mother died a few weeks ago, and while on the trip to attend her funeral I met a woman who told me she was my husband's legal wife. I asked my husband about it, and he said he thought he had obtained a divorce.

"I asked Judge Pratt of the Superior Court at Los Angeles about it and he told me that a legal divorce had never been granted and that the other woman was still his legal wife. I did not know what to do.

"Of course I could not live with a man who was not my husband and I knew my Eastern relatives would criticise me, even if I wanted to, had no place to go so I thought that I would come home to my uncle.

APPEALED IN VAIN.

"I got together what little money I had and with my two children started East. My first child is William Patrick Tully. I named him Patrick after his father and William after his uncle. He is four and one-half years old. The other child is a girl. Her name is Mary Florence Tully and she is twenty months old.

"We landed in Boston on Good Friday. After going to a hotel I went down town to see my uncle at the offices of the American Woolen Company in the National Shawmut Bank Building. I saw him and after great difficulty and much to my surprise he refused to do anything for me. He accused me of blackmail. Two of his clerks shoved me aside and some of his body guard also grabbed me.

"I was stunned with disappointment and grief. I went out to see my grandmother, Mrs. Emma C. Wood, corner of Main and Kirby streets, Woburn. When I went out there my grandmother threw her arms around me and hugged me but said I must not come in as her son had ordered her not to help me.

HOTEL SEIZED BAGGAGE.

"Finally last week my money gave out. The management of a hotel told me that it had been ordered not to extend me any more credit. I had paid my bill, all but ten dollars. They took my baggage away from me for the bill and for a vase that my little boy broke.

"I had to do something. In despair I went to another hotel. Then I realized that the bill was counting up with every minute. Someone told me that the city would help me out. I came down here and for the first time I found sympathy. The policemen and the reporters and everybody else down here has been kind. I would not be here if it was not for my babies."

STORRROW IN NEW ATTACK ON MAYOR

menaced by this blare and rapidly increasing debt.

Now, how about the years since this new Council has been in office, from 1909 to 1916.

On January 31, 1909, the net debt of the city was $56,277,000. On January 31, 1916, it was $56,294,000, which shows an actual decrease in the city debt during the period covered by the present City Council of $482,865, and this, in spite of the fact that about three-quarters of a million of extra debt was assumed when Hyde Park was annexed in 1912.

This year, for the first time after a budget campaign which has been carried on by the Council for nearly two years, the Council has before it for consideration the proposed city expenditures correctly itemized and divided into some thirty-six hundred items.

During the last eight weeks the Council has been working nearly every afternoon and evening on these thirty-six hundred items questioning the heads of departments in regard to them and making up His own independent judgment as to their merits.

But the crisis in the deliberations of the City Council comes this week.

Is the City Council going to co-operate with Mayor Curley in sanctioning his transfer of more than $350,000 from the real needs of the city to the pay rolls? The Mayor has attempted to build up his political machine at the expense of the taxpayers by spending their money on pay rolls instead of putting it into streets and other municipal necessities.

To get an adequate sum for the city streets it is not going to be necessary for the City Council to drop any present city employes, but merely to call a halt on new jobs, and to postpone for the present the salary increases which the Mayor has proposed to hand out.

Three members of the Council who co-operate with the Mayor to transfer in effect this sum of $350,000 from streets to payroll will show themselves in my judgment either to be frightened by or else subservient to the Mayor and his political machine, rather than serving all the citizens of Boston.

In short, what Boston needs is more money for labor on our streets, and less money for politicians at City Hall.

BOYS' CLUB HOSTS TO AID SOCIETY

The Roxbury Boys' Club of Dudley street, Roxbury, in appreciation of a reception and entertainment given them previously by the Special Aid Society for American Preparedness, entertained ten or twelve prominent members of the Special Aid Society and a hundred or more guests, including many Grand Army veterans, at the Dudley street club rooms. An interesting program in charge of Mr. Kronberg, organizer of the Roxbury Boys' Naval Brigade, included a talk by Mr. Miller upon the U. S. power boat Parrot and lantern slides by Lieutenant Cole. Norman Lovett spoke for the Special Aid Society.

SECTION HAND IS KILLED IN MALDEN

The crew of a Boston & Maine freight found the body of John O'Brien of Highland avenue, Malden, on the tracks near the Malden depot, in badly mangled condition. O'Brien was a section hand. He is survived by a widow and eight children.

MAN'S BODY FOUND ON RAILROAD TRACK

The body of Michael T. Welch, No. 880 Canterbury street, was found on the New Haven embankment near the Forest Hills station early today. Welch, who was thirty-eight, died from natural causes, according to Associate Medical Examiner Watters.

NEW PAYLESS 'PAY DAY' FOR CITY WORKERS

Boston city employes had another payless payday yesterday. Two more city departments found themselves without funds to meet their payrolls and other expenses. These were the hospital employes and the jurors.

Two hundred and fifty-four jurors did not receive their pay.

The payless paydays of the past two Saturdays were due to the failure of the City Council to finish up passing the budget appropriations.

The Mayor gave out a statement last night in which he declared that he was glad the Council would finish with the budget this week so that the department could pay their bills and payrolls. He said:

"The Council has cut the budget $475,000 so far, all of the cuts being for material, supply, equipment and repair items. The prices for such items are notoriously higher than they were a year ago, therefore I am very skeptical as to the wisdom of these reductions.

"Curtailment of materials and supplies means reduction in the amount of service rendered to the public. Furthermore, it appears that the amount allowed for some of these items for the entire year is less than the amount actually spent up to the present time.

"Many of these cuts will have to be restored later in the light of better information than that furnished by the Finance Commission's rapid-fire investigators.

"It seems to me a mistaken policy to retard the materialization of the department as the Council has done by cutting $25,500 off the item for motor apparatus. It is equally a mistaken policy to cut out amounts for street work by contract as the Council has done to the extent of $147,000. These items, amounting to nearly $170,000, should be restored before the Council finishes the budget."

INVENTOR GIVES 3-CENT 'GAS' A TEST

Stoneham Man Runs Auto with Liquid Compound He Mixes with Water; Process Is Secret

Daniel E. Smith, a Stoneham attorney, thirty-three years old, says he has discovered a substitute for gasoline (unlike to Louis Knricht's much-discussed "penny" gasoline, which Smith says can be made and sold at a profit for three cents a gallon.

The substitute has been named "motor gas," and is built up on much the same principle as the debased water gasoline of Knricht, according to Inventor Smith.

During a demonstration of the motive properties of the fluid yesterday, Mr. Smith, with Chauffeur Otis Hunter and E. H. Goss, Dexter G. Pratt and Frank E. Wetherell of Stoneham drove two and one-half miles on a quart of the "gas" poured from a bottle in the inventor's pocket into the tank of the car after the tank had been emptied of gasoline.

USES MUCH WATER.

With six persons in the automobile, a speed of twenty miles an hour was maintained during the test, with a maximum speed of twenty-five miles. At the end of the test some of the liquid remained in the tank.

"While I am unwilling to disclose the ingredients of my mixture, I will say that 75 per cent. of the 'motor gas' is composed of water," said Mr. Smith. "The chemicals of which it is made are ordinary ones. If you went to a drug store and asked for any one of them no one would guess that you wanted them for a gasoline substitute.

"If you have a quart of the 'gas' under your automobile seat and the tank runs dry get five gallons of water, mix it with your quart of gas substitute and you are equipped with motor gas that will carry you as far as would five gallons of gasoline.

"The ingredients are so cheap that a profit could be made if this motor gas sold at 3 cents a gallon.

ANOTHER TEST TODAY.

"Enricht and I may be using the same ingredients—we have simultaneously stumbled upon the same formula.

"As much motive power can be obtained from a gallon of my substance as from a gallon of gasoline."

Smith has secured a patent upon a automobile valve primer, an appliance which is attached to the manifold of the engine and contains a kind of chemical fluid which aids in the process of utilizing the oxygen of the air as an aid to the motive power, thus saving one-fourth of the gasoline, according to the inventor.

Mr. Smith says that in one test with the primer, an automobile was driven 28 miles on two gallons of gasoline. He made another test yesterday in Stoneham. Wakefield and Reading with a reporter from the Sunday AMERICAN.

Smith will conduct a demonstration for the benefit of newspapermen and automobilists tomorrow at 11 a. m. in front of the Peerless Motor Company's building at No. 660 Commonwealth avenue.

Girl Charges Dentist Hugged and Kissed Her, Asks for $10,000

Miss Nellie Wells Kendall of Cambridge who has brought suit against Dr. Charles Downie of Newburyport and tells of love-making in the dentist's chair.

Cambridge Nurse Also Charges He Proposed, but Afterwards Refused to Marry Her.

Miss Nellie Wells Kendall of No. 297 Green street, Cambridge, has brought suit in the Suffolk County courts, it became known last night, against Dr. Charles Downie, a dentist, charging that he made love to her when she went to him to have her teeth attended to.

She asks $10,000 damages for breach of promise and assault, and in telling the story of her case last night said that he had threatened to kill her if she ever went with any other man.

Dr. Downie has an office at No. 4 Pleasant street, Newburyport, and it was there, the girl said, that she met him. She was working in Newburyport as a trained nurse, and went to the dentist to have her teeth treated.

He made an appointment with her, she said, for the following day at 11 o'clock, and when she appeared and after she had sat down in the chair, she said, "he began to hug me and kiss me and make love to me."

She said he made another appointment for seven o'clock that evening, and that "He made love to me again then, and I went home crying."

"The next Sunday," she continued, "he came to call on me and apologized, and I forgave him, and we went about together some for the rest of the summer. We went to Plum Island one night, and he made love to me again, and made me angry, but he told me I was the only girl for him, and said he wanted to marry me, and so I thought we were engaged."

She returned to her home in Cambridge, she said, after he had refused to marry her and wanted her to go to New York with him and be married there. He came to Cambridge to see her, she said, and threatened to shoot himself if she ever became friendly with another man.

"Finally," she said, "mother told him to keep away."

ROOSEVELT IS NAMED BY THE BULL MOOSERS

Prof. Hart Demands Vigorous Foreign Policy; Delegates for Roosevelt.

man, woman and child in the United States a real chance to live and a real chance to earn a comfortable living.

"Just so long as great masses of our population are below or near the starvation line, we shall never have an effective preparedness. No man who is not able to earn enough money to support his wife and children in reasonable comfort can be fairly expected to have a real love for the country.

"In the second place, let us always bear in mind that preparedness is never an end in itself, but always a means to an end. Internationally, it is a means to the end of bringing about a better understanding among nations, ultimately accomplishing a world's peace with an international police force."

Professor Hart, the permanent chairman, has written upon diplomatic and international law questions for the present war. He collaborated with President Wilson in former years on a historical review.

He began his speech: "We want a vigorous foreign policy."

When the chair subsided he went on in part as follows:

VIGOROUS FOREIGN POLICY.

"Is it that we desire to impose our power upon a foreign nation? Is it that we desire a strong policy in a spirit of conquest? No, what we want is—that we, ourselves, may be secure, that our children and our children's children shall be free to practice the arts of peace; that we may build schools, colleges, mines, railroads; that we may develop our agriculture and our natural resources.

"The only way we can secure ourselves is by a vigorous foreign policy that will prevent a foreign fee from coming in and taking the fruits of our labor.

"The Progressive party is a party of national defence. We are not prepared. Millions of words have been exhausted but little has been done. The ships of a foreign nation could anchor outside of Boston harbor, but not within gun, and drop shells into Faneuil Hall.

"The men of our navy are brave and able. But they have not had the opportunity to prepare themselves for our defence.

"Congress has been dragooned into passing some preparedness laws but they are not sufficient.

"We want not only men and ships but also transportation and railroads. They should build at once a double-track railroad from Maine to Key West to protect the most vulnerable section of our country.

"We need statesmanship and we need a man that would have the courage to use it. We need a national consciousness for preparation of national defence. Without preparation you're bankrupt, you're ruined, you're at the mercy of all the winds that blow."

Professor Hart summarized the Progressive principles as follows:

We want self-government, not a pseudo government of office-holders and their friends.

We want a government giving the people the largest opportunity to express their will by their votes—and to have the votes counted.

We never have been afraid that Woman's Suffrage would be dangerous.

We have set ourselves against corporation greed and control of the United States.

We will no longer look at the spectacle of control of the United States by the lease and assignment of corporations.

Without preparedness, you're bankrupt, you're ruined, and you're at the mercy of every wind that blows.

We welcome all races, provided they throw aside the cloak that bears the colors of another nation.

The chairman eulogized Theodore Roosevelt as a courageous fighter.

These delegates at large to the Chicago Convention were elected to have a total voting strength of two: Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, Cambridge; H. Hinsdill Newton, Everett; Daniel T. Callahan, Winthrop; Alvin G. Weeks, Fall River; Nelson H. Clark, Beverly.

Alternates at large: Richard Talbot, Springfield; Miss S. Thompson, Worcester; Russell S. Wood, Cambridge; Frederick Foddick, Fitchburg; Eugene Cox, Malden.

DISTRICT DELEGATES.

First district—Charles Knight Potter, Williamstown, and William E. Towne, Holyoke; 2, Leicester Warren and Edward W. Leonard, Springfield; 3, Jonas Bemis, Charlton, and Albert H Barron, Gardner; 4th, William H. Gates, Worcester; 5th, William H. Clark, Westboro; 5th, Abraham S. Goldman and William N. Osgood, Lowell.

Sixth district—John F. Browning, Salem, and John Balch Blood, Newburyport; 7th, Andrew Case and C. A. Littlefield, Lynn; 8th, George A. Goodwin, Cambridge, and Charles M. Cox, Malden; 9th, Frederick Lothrop Everett, and Jerome M. Houghton, Somerville; 10th, Frank J. Angier and Joseph A. Langone, Boston; 11th, Irving Ayres, Arlington, and J. Franklin Waters, Boston; 12th, Latimer B. Reed and Charles E. Miller, Dorchester.

Thirteenth district—O. W. Holmes, Boston, and O. Waldo Crawley, Needham; 14th, Lewis P. Wiechmann, Hyde Park, and Dr. W. H. Greeley, Abington; 15th, Dr. J. B. Gerould, North Attleboro, and James M. Buffington, Fall River; 16th, Alvin C. Howes and Lemuel P. Thomas, Middleboro.

BOY IS KILLED BY GUN HE PICKS UP

Plymouth, May 6.—John Wood, twelve-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wood, of Kingston, was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of a shotgun today. The Wood boy and Frank Kelliher, a boy companion, went to the Summer home of Joseph K. Johnson of Boston, in front they saw the gun, and young Wood picked it up. The trigger caught in his pocket and the charge entered under the boy's chin.

PLAN TO INCREASE COMMERCE BOARD

Washington, May 6.—Senator Newlands' bill increasing the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission from seven to nine and dividing the members into three groups to expedite their work was ordered favorably reported to the Senate today by the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Roosevelt Watch Always Reliable, Says Prof. Hart

Professor Albert Bushnell Hart, chairman of the Progressive convention in Faneuil Hall yesterday, compared the three leading Presidential possibilities with "three watch companies," as follows:

"There is the Wilson Watch—Hands don't move except to write nearly twenty-four hours a day.

"Hughes Watch—Perfect watch, 150 jewels, and very neat, but no hands at all.

"Roosevelt Watch—Tried and true; hands always moving and always able to tell what time it is."

BIG THEFTS OF FREIGHT FROM BOSTON LINERS

An unusually large number of thefts from steamships sailing from Boston, and from freight cars in transit for the past few months has started the officials of the local departments of the railroads and steamship lines investigating, and they are now set to believe that the organized band at work robbing them.

The larger amount of thefts come from the steamship companies, although the railroads have been suffering for some time from petty pilferings. Whole cases of cloth, clothing and other merchandise disappearing from the docks or steamships bound out of Boston are constantly being reported to the police, and at the yards 11,000 cars north of merchandise disappears in one trip, according to the steamship people. The cases are checked up at Boston, but on reaching Albany, Buffalo or Southern ports the cases are missing.

So great have become these thefts that the steamers sailing from Boston now carry detectives as part of their crews. Already one line has prosecuted several stevedores and coal passers, who had broken into a case of shoes being shipped back to Boston and taken several pairs. These men were doing a thriving business at a North End saloon' home.

The police have also been rallied in on these freight robberies. Most of their cases, however, have been for thefts from freight cars. There have been many of these lately, and the goods taken from the freight cars are similar in type to those stolen from the steamships, leading the shippers to believe that an organized gang is doing the thieving.

One of the heaviest losers has been the Clyde line. This line has three sailings to the south out of Boston each week.

"We have had a big increase in thefts of late," said Myron Clarke, of the local office of the line. "Those who are stealing take only cloth, shirts, shoes and liquor. Wheels cases disappear after the ship gets to sea.

"So far we have caught three of four coal passers and firemen, who we found had stolen a case of shoes and were selling them. We now have detectives on the boats, working in the fire room and as seamen, and we intend to put a stop to this thieving."

Expert Supports Sunday's Plan for Wooden Building

A Billy Sunday echoless fireproof tabernacle in Boston will cost $35,000 or more, according to Rollin M. Thompson, Technology instructor and acoustic expert.

Without the anti-echo features which will greatly add to the cost, Instructor Thompson yesterday said that the Evangelist's voice would convers my one, since it could not be heard.

"It would be a continual echo," stated the Tech expert.

Billy Sunday naturally insists upon wooden tabernacles, since he has found the wooden structure suitable in his view which is not particularly a strong one. He would suffer great financial loss should he be compelled to preach in a cement structure without echo destroying accessories.

Persons familiar with the wooden sunday tabernacle believe it is not a fire risk, since in emergency its light walls can be thrown down.

"Sunday's championing of the wooden building is scientifically correct, since a wooden building possesses better acoustic possibilities."

SUNDAY LID ON SOMERVILLE FRUIT STORES

Dealers Protest Action of Aldermen and Warn Public by Novel Poster Display.

The fruit dealers of Somerville, backed by a considerable public sentiment are organizing to do battle against the Somerville Board of Aldermen in consequence of an order to close their stores on Sunday.

The contest promises to be no tame affair, for those who would like to make the Somerville Sunday as quiet as Plymouth Sundays were in the days of Miles Standish, and the less religious who brazenly feel that to eat fruit, or buy fruit, or sell fruit, on the Lord's Day, is not one at all. There are such.

Facing stubborn armed enemies, the fruit dealers last night opened war. Two signs were printed, one of them in the same pattern, indicating that the "little" merchants are united. After they had come from the printer, one, over the fruit door for barring, and the other in the window with placards advising their customers to buy today what is needed tomorrow, were set conspicuously in the face of Miles Standish, and the less religious who brazenly feel that to eat fruit, or buy fruit, or sell fruit, on the Lord's Day, is not one at all. There are such.

Facing stubborn armed enemies, the fruit dealers last night opened war. Two signs were printed, one of them over City Hall by mustering their shop windows with placards advising their customers to buy today what is needed tomorrow, and the other in the window of every fruit store in Somerville, where city governments and boards of trade take to heart the welfare and prosperity of local citizens.

MERCHANTS UNITED.

The action of the Aldermen in not receive general approval throughout Somerville, and for a day or two Aldermen were talking of granting dispensations freely to those who would fix up their stores with the paraphernalia necessary for carrying sandwiches and coffee. Apparently the Board has backed water, however, for no licenses were granted on Friday night, and signed yesterday by Mayor Hall were only those granted for the sale of fruit, ice cream, soda water and confectionery.

The fruit men, who point out that fruit appears to be the only Sunday delicacy stores continue to handle ice cream, confectionery and "sody"-yesterday posted proclamations reading as follows:

NOTICE

Abiding by the deliberation of the Board of Aldermen of the 27th of last April in setting aside some of our rights, we are on this Lord's Day.

But, in sacrificing our best day of business, we owe to our customers, to the general public and to ourselves a few words of explanation.

Considering the partiality of the Aldermen of Somerville in granting licenses in five places for the sale of soda water, ice cream, cigars, tobacco and all kinds of soft drinks on this Sunday because there will be plenty of other stores open to this special privilege.

But, if in case of sickness or other circumstances, you are ill and of the purest, healthiest of food—fruit—we refer you with the approbation of Messrs. Durgin, Pevelle, Bell, Blair, Lovelles, Farrell, Pincus, Tinkham, Webster, Austin, Andrews, Richardson, Mack, Dargett and President Flemming of the Board of Aldermen, to go and buy it in the nearby cities, in which their government and their Board of Trade have to heart the welfare and prosperity of their citizens.

THE FRUIT DEALERS.

NOTE: THE POSTSCRIPT.

One of these above cards, sent to the Sunday AMERICAN office last night, carries a "P. S." written to ink:

P. S.—At the last moment we hear that the above-mentioned gentlemen have granted five or six Lord's Day licenses to some special privilege people.

Many Somerville people expect that Mayor Cliff will be the first to note the possibilities of serious political trouble in what is still merely a flare-up, and that under his skilful guidance the Board of Aldermen will be brought to a frame of mind where the little fellow will again receive the same consideration which is shown to his larger and more powerful competitor.

BOSTON HEALTH BOARD CONGRATULATES AMERICAN ON ITS BABY CONTEST

BABY WEEK is over, but the baby is to be kept in the limelight for some time to come.

The Boston American should be congratulated upon its attempt to centre public attention upon the baby—the pride of the home and the hope of the country.

This contest is open to all babies in Greater Boston between the ages of six months and two years. For the baby judged the most perfect a silver cup will be awarded, for the next ten, gold medals, the following fifteen are to receive silver medals, while to twenty-five following will be awarded bronze medals. A special prize will be given to each baby who enters the contest and whose history shows that effort has been taken by the mother with resultant good. This prize will be a certificate of honor.

The Boston American furnishes a history blank upon which facts concerning the baby must be written. This, with a photograph of the baby, is then sent to the American. Competent judges have been picked.

This contest is sure to arouse the people, so that they will talk baby, study baby, and learn how to bring up the baby in the best possible way. The age period, six months to two years, is the most interesting period of child life. The dangers to the child grow less as the child grows older, as shown by the constantly diminishing death rate.—From the March Monthly Bulletin of the Health Department of the City of Boston.

JUDGES BUSY PICKING OUT BEST BABIES

Great Rush of Entries Marks the Close of the American's Contest for Winners in Greater Boston

The contest conducted by the AMERICAN to find the most perfect baby among babies in Greater Boston closed at midnight. No entry will be considered which arrived after 12 o'clock. The books are closed to the public and open to the judges.

The labor of picking fifty-one babies better than all others will be arduous and will require extreme patience and careful thought.

A long shelf full of letter files, each one bulging with photographs, blanks and descriptive notes, represents the accumulations for five weeks. The last few days, with the final rush of entrants, have greatly overtaxed the capacity of the files, and it is time they be opened and examined by the six judges.

It is doubtful whether ever before so many splendid babies were entered in a single contest. This Greater Boston contest has some surprises in store for New York by reason of the perfect babies already the Boston AMERICAN has printed groups of lovely, sturdy, smiling youngsters who might well honor the greatest baby contests the world knows.

As for intelligence, who will say the Boston babies are behind others? Letters by the hundreds from mothers tell of accomplishments which should convince any skeptic that greater Boston babies begin their education early.

Generally a town out of the forty eligible in the contest but has entered babies in the competition. Lynn, Dorchester, Roxbury, Somerville, South Boston, Chelsea, Malden, Milford, Revere and Everett furnish the majority in the contest. Boston proper, of course, is represented by a host of entrants, many of them are babies under the care of the Milk and Baby Hygiene Association.

An encouraging feature of the contest is the large number of babies offered in the districts which were formerly regarded as the slum districts. Questions asked of the Best Baby Editor indicate that all who have entered their babies in the contest followed the daily AMERICAN baby column closely.

Although each mother believes her baby is without doubt just about the most perfect being ever discovered on the face of the globe, she often excuses her love for all babies.

Such mothers will no doubt be disappointed if the judges do not select or receive medals, but they are reasonable and will recognize the fact that where from babies, all fine and healthy, enter a contest, but a few can carry away the prizes.

WATCH FOR WINNERS.

Many mothers have been proud to see their babies' pictures in the paper, while others were much disappointed not to find their favorite among them. But it would be impossible to print all the beautiful photographs; space is not given for such a display, much as the Best Baby Editor would like to see all entrants in the AMERICAN.

Now mothers and fathers, please be patient while the judges are at work. In all probability the prize winners will be announced in next Sunday's paper, with a photograph of the winning baby. The judges are busy physicians, and they cannot give all their time in connection with the AMERICAN contest. Because of this fact it may take a few days longer before a decision is reached than otherwise would be the case.

When blanks have been minutely studied and compared the best babies will be brought together for final examination.

Watch the papers for prize winners, they may appear any day.

New Contest On for Finest Baby in Land

The contest to determine the Best Baby in Greater Boston closed last night; but the Best Baby Editor today announces the second in the series of contests designed to select the finest baby in the country.

The contest which closed last night was for Metropolitan Boston only. The contest which opens tomorrow is for the rest of New England.

Babies in this new contest will be grouped in seven districts, as follows, Connecticut, east of the Connecticut river.

Massachusetts east of the Connecticut, excluding Metropolitan Boston.

Massachusetts west of the Connecticut.

Rhode Island.

New Hampshire.

Vermont.

Maine.

In each of the seven districts, a gold medal will be awarded the finest baby, silver medals to the second and third best, and bronze medals to the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh best.

That means seven babies in each of the seven districts or seven gold medals, two silver medals and four bronze medals.

Then the seven babies receiving the gold medals will compete for the championship silver cup.

And the baby winning the championship cup is Greater Boston.

The winner, the best baby in New England, will compete in the national championship.

Entries will be received beginning [illegible]. For particulars, watch the AMERICAN.

BOSTON TO SHOW IT IS PREPARED

Great Demonstration Being Arranged by Committee of 100; Harvard and Tech to Take Part.

Boston is to have a "Preparedness" parade. The date will probably be May 27. The Massachusetts Cadets, regiments and several business men's classes which have been drilling in Greater Boston armories will take part.

The local demonstration will follow the gigantic New York parade to be held next Saturday, to which many Boston persons interested in the "Preparedness" movement have been invited.

A committee of 100 men under the leadership of Major Henry L. Higginson, is in charge of the Boston demonstration.

It is expected many women will parade. This will probably be decided during the week at a meeting of the Special Aid for American Preparedness Society. Just how many organizations will march is not as yet known, although the committee of 100, all of whom are members of the National Security League and militia officers, are working out the details. There will be a meeting of these men to decide on a definite date for the parade and to learn how many additional organizations will march.

On May 29, Major-General Leonard Wood will be in Boston, and will speak on that evening for the Special Aid for American Preparedness. On May 30 the general will review the Harvard regiment.

The New York parade, it is expected, will be one of the largest that city has ever seen. Thousands who have applied to march have been unable to find places in the line.

BOSTON PUPILS WRITE BETTER

And There Is Improvement in the Way They Add and Spell.

A marked improvement in spelling, writing and arithmetic among pupils in the Boston public schools is shown by the report of Superintendent of Schools Franklin P. Dexter, just out.

In elementary arithmetic the report shows 12 to 17 per cent. improvement; in spelling a betterment of 20 per cent.; in writing a 15 per cent. improvement is expected to be shown at the end of the present school year.

Do German Babes Need Milk? Boston Women Are at Odds

MRS. WILLIAM LOWELL PUTNAM, at left, who declares cry for milk for German babies is insincere, and Mrs. Edmund von Mach, who insists German babies are suffering.

The question as to whether the United States shall send condensed milk to the babies of Germany, Austria-Hungary and Poland is being warmly argued by two prominent women, Mrs. William Lowell Putnam of Boston and Mrs. Edmund von Mach of Cambridge.

Mrs. Putnam declares that infant mortality in Germany is less at present than before the war started, and that Germany is playing on the feelings of humanity.

Mrs. von Mach, on the other hand, asserts with equal vehemence that she has positive information regarding a shortage of milk in Germany, and that the babies are suffering. She says that the fact that the Red Cross will distribute the milk sent from this country should be proof enough that it will be used for its destined purpose.

The statements of the two women follow:

By MRS. WILLIAM L. PUTNAM.

It is not a question of sending milk to babies that we are opposed to. It is a question whether those babies are in need.

There is very good reason to doubt that the babies in Germany are suffering from lack of milk.

Germany has led us to misstate her motives before this. She is now playing upon the tender feelings of many people in America to beat the cries of the infants. Many Americans have responded to that cry and given liberally. They are willing to respond as long as they feel that the infants will get the milk and not other exercises.

There is very good reason to doubt the sincerity of this cry for the infants. And I say without any reserve it is absolutely unfair to play upon the humanity of people to get money out of them for infants when we are assured from very good sources that the infants are better off in Germany now than they were before the war.

The Chancellor tells the truth no doubt when he says Germany has food enough. At least we have no reason for not believing him, as he ought to know.

Infant mortality is less now in Germany than before the war.

This matter of infant mortality has been studied carefully and the conclusions are given after much deliberation.

Germany has taken the cows from Belgium and the South of France. She has impoverished other countries to enrich her own. She has been accused of taking food that was meant for Belgium.

All things considered we ought to be careful in allowing this infant cry to upset us. There is more back of it than a mere cry.

By MRS. VON MACH.

Everything has been done to get Mrs. Putnam to make public her misgivings about the milk for German babies.

It is only a short time ago in Tremont Temple she was invited to speak at a meeting in behalf of German babies, and when called upon did not respond.

The attitude of Mrs. Putnam is easily answered in all its details when we say that the milk for German babies and others will be distributed not by any German agents, but by the Red Cross society.

We do know there is a serious shortage of milk in Germany. Probably in all the German efficiency this is one respect in which it did not display itself in making ample provision for the care and preservation of cows.

Too many cattle were killed off at the beginning of the war, a mistake was made there. I need not go into other details proving that we are not deceiving the generous public in asking for their help, neither are we exposing to do Germany a service by playing false.

The last mail from Germany, which has just reached this country after a delay of one month or more, is ample evidence that we are asking for what is sorely needed.

We do not want any one else to distribute the milk in the affected districts except the Red Cross Society.

To be suspicious of us and imagine that we are getting milk into Germany for war purposes is hardly fair to those who think more of babies than they do of guns.

However, we have sent two shipments of condensed milk. Our third shipment has not been heard from. We would like to get clearance papers for another ship. Babies are crying in Germany. Must we hear them?

BOSTON URGED TO FEED ITS PUPILS

Boston was urged to set on foot a system of feeding its school children at cost, in a resolution adopted yesterday at the final session of the Inter-Municipal Conference on the school lunch problem in Perkins Hall, Boylston street.

The conference has heard statements that many children in the Boston elementary schools did not have sufficient or proper food. There have been for some time arrangements—unofficial—for serving food at cost to children in the secondary schools. The conference voted to urge that this unofficial work be continued in an official undertaking to feed all the school children in both elementary and secondary schools.

Delegates to the number of 126, men and women, representing Massachusetts, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Vermont, attended the conference. At yesterday's session Miss Sarah Louise Arnold of Simmons College presided.

TWO DORCHESTER BOYS HIT TRAIL

Alan C. Chase and Albert Ewell, fifteen-year-old Dorchester chums, apparently couldn't stand that spring wanderlust any longer. They have been gone from their homes since Thursday afternoon.

They had no money, so far as is known. Each hid left behind his Boy Scout camping outfit.

The fathers figure that the boys may have headed for New York. If they meant to hit the mountain trails or live in the woods—on game and fish, you know—why, they surely would have taken along the camp stuff.

Alan is the son of Walter S. Chase of No. 5 Algonquin street. He is in the Dorchester High School. Albert Ewell is in the final year at the Oliver Wendell Holmes School. His father is John Ewell of No. 2 School street.

Alan has light complexion, blue eyes and brown hair, is five feet tall, weighs 100 pounds and wears blue jersey suit with long trousers, soft shirt and collar, gray cap and black lace shoes. Ewell is smaller and of lighter weight. He wears a white colored coat, blue trousers, tan jersey shoes and gray cap.

BIG FIGHT CENTERS ON P. S. BOARD

Corporations Back Bill to Replacelt by Board of Three; Public Men Oppose Measure

When the Massachusetts Public Service Commission, on March 28 last, issued a decree compelling the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company to reduce the price of extension telephone sets, it agreed that it may turn out to be its own death warrant.

The big public utility corporations of the State have decided that a State commission that so boldly reached into the treasury of one of their number and took out $80,000 of excessive profits, to be returned to the patrons, should be removed.

Acting through their next friends, the financiers of State Street, and the small but powerful lobby under their control, the corporations have massed their strength behind the bill to abolish the present commission and to substitute a new board of three members here.

The order directing a reduction of from $6 to $4 per year in the price of telephone extension sets used by 250,000 subscribers, was the last of a series of blows that have wounded the corporations.

FIGHTS INQUIRY NOW.

The telephone company feels its wounds most acutely. It fears an investigation of its rates and service by the present Public Service Commission. The company wants to delay the proposed rate reduction until next year. It expects that by that time the present commission will be ousted and that the investigation will be made by a hand-picked Public Service Commission that will behave just as the company tells it to.

A recent investigation of telephone rates in New York saved the patrons $5,000,000 a year in their telephone expenses.

The Public Service Commission says that a similar investigation should be made in this State.

Telephone rates are based on what the company calls "reasonable and equitable." If a notion can hit on the receiver and do business over the phone with one subscriber, it may be charged more than it or could reach ten people on the phone. The greater number of phones used, the lower the price charged.

In New York City there are 612,000 phones and in Chicago about 450,000.

The rate in New York and Chicago for 1,000 calls, measured service, is $65.

Boston has about 210,000 phones, measured service, and the rate is $40.

It is said at the Public Service Commission that in many instances the persons paying the most for their contracting with the company to have a telephone get the benefit of being charged 10 cents a call to neighboring exchanges while the person who chances to order a telephone and has to walk into a drug store and lift the receiver from the hook can get the same call for a nickel.

These are some of the things the commission says should be investigated.

NEW YORK FACTS.

Stockholders have been led to believe by the officials that an investigation would be dangerous to their interests. But the New York Telephone Company's annual report, issued March 24, showed that the net earnings, instead of $1,171,000, The New York company made $3,000,000 a year, showing that the net earnings increased by $1,171,000.

The unexpected enough for new telephones and an increased demand in use of telephones previously used, are reflected in the annual report for the year.

The telephone company is determined that it shall, if possible, end the investigation by the present commissioners. Whether it succeeds would increase or not, they prefer to take their chance with a new commission next year.

There also stands out the case of the Big State Street Railway. The railway is said to feel that it is only getting a "mean trust" on its recent franchise. It is also said to be confident for railways as well as telephone companies, if they would appeal, their fare application to the Public Service Commission that would oppose them by the public-utility corporations' choice of public officials who are said to allies the suppliers of the public.

The present attitude of the commission has wounded the railroads and various corporations and individuals. Those little fellows have been left small pickings on Beacon Hill, have little sympathy for a commission that so ruthlessly cuts down the size of the "slush fund" of the New Haven.

Certain bills which have been obviously offered much the same recommendation that the Grout-Foss-Hampden reform bill was offered, to merge with the Boston Elevated.

Now that opponent after opponent has fallen in provinces they are in. The lobby, returned to Beacon Hill with the strength of a victorious army in the seventh month of initial.

But the bill will encounter the most vigorous opposition of any legislative matter at the present session. That is admitted by the corporation representatives and lobbyists on the job.

STAND BY BOARD.

The opposition to the suggested emasculation of the commission was crystallized during the public hearing before the Ways and Means Committee. United States Senator Murray, George W. Anderson and E. A. Filene, the Boston merchant, declared that a change would be particularly inadvisable at this time, in view of the big rate cases now pending.

George Abbott of Concord disturbed the dignity somewhat in his dealings with Satan, but Satan, as a rule, has come more than any other agency to equalize the rates of transportation for both rural and city districts of Massachusetts as result to make a political football of the question, it is said.

Thomas H. Jones, the shoe manufacturer, said that the commission is seeking to get rid of the discrimination between the industries and the railroads. He said he believed the industries would prefer the removal of the commission during those negotiations.

The scheme has been vigorously disapproved by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the United Improvement Association and by various labor organizations, including the railroad brotherhoods.

Before a House of Representatives committee of Boston, Cambridge and other cities of Essex County also is regarded as against the big state control fire now, he outlined the Wages and Means Committee's plan to increase the commission's membership to three and to remove the commissioners from politics by increasing the salaries to $7,500 each.

The big State is the biggest street railway in the country. The people of Massachusetts have invested $31,471,000 in use of telephones previously used, are reflected in the annual report for the year.

STRONG CLOSING OF BOSTON-NEW YORK STOCK MARKETS

BUYING COPPER TO USE NEXT YEAR

Demand for Future Supply Sends 1917 Quotations to High Level

Copper metal continues in such demand that prices firmly remain on a high level. There is no sign of any decrease in consumption this year or next. The metal commands high prices for months ahead. The price tendency is still upward. There is already a scarcity of August and September copper. Buying is of such character that it is a good inquiry for January delivery, and large blocks have been sold at 28 cents a pound.

While a good deal of metal has been bought recently for Italy, France is said to be the most persistent foreign purchaser. A statement as to the situation readers:

"The recent announcement of Army and Navy Departments that stocks of munitions would be materially increased means that government arsenals as well as private contractors will be in the market for copper, giving additional impetus to the already enormous demand. Specification can be secured of reports of large foreign government purchases, but reports current in the large producers from many countries in Europe, especially France, aggregate a heavy tonnage daily."

It was rumored in New York that France had bought an additional supply of 200,000 pounds for delivery from July 1 to December.

During the week there was good buying by domestic consumers, June, July and August metal being in especial request.

During the week there was from but dull, while lead was quiet and weaker in tone. Spelter was dull and inclined to recede.

On the New York Metal Exchange yesterday copper was strong and spelter quiet. Copper sales were: August 29½c, September 29c, last quarter 1916 and first quarter 1917 delivery 28½c for February and 28¾c for March. Lake copper sold at 29½c to May 17th to 17th, June 16th to 16th, July 15th to 16c.

The market continued to advance last week. It sold above 27c on sales of 30,000 tons. A year ago it could be bought for less than 50 cents. It averaged 13.63 cents in price in 1911. It has not been above 14 for more than twenty-five years as it is now.

Small Cuts in Tire Shoes Should Be Filled with Some Plastic Rubber Compound or Vulcanized

By MERLE SHEPARD.

Blowouts are the most expensive part of motoring. There are two kinds of blowouts—one in which lobster, champagne and other culinary and bibulous delights are strongly represented, and the other in which the principal ingredients are worn rubber and air. The remedy and method of lowering costs in the first type of blowout are so obvious that no advice need be given here; the second kind, however, can be subjected to careful attention, and the ways and means of avoiding a deflated pocketbook, due to tire trouble, indicated.

If any tire company service manager were to be asked to express in one word what is the greatest cause of tire trouble, there is no doubt that he would answer, "underinflation." It seems strange that a man who appreciated the value of money to such an extent that he will grumble because his car only travels ten miles to the gallon instead of twelve will allow the car to travel on underinflated tires so that he only gets 4,000 miles out of a shoe instead of 7,000 or 8,000. The difference in the gasoline bill at the end of the season and the difference in the tire bill cannot be compared, and yet the money is paid over for new tires without a word, while vigorous protests accompany the refilling of the gasoline tank.

The effect of underinflation on a tire is to break down its entire structure. An automobile tire is made up of laminations which are held in proper relation to one another by the air that is in the tube. When insufficient air is in the tube the tire cannot maintain its form under the weight of the car, and the result is that the tire at the top of the wheel is in correct shape, but the part at the bottom of the wheel at the point of contact with the ground is very much distorted. The tire must, in revolving, go through the stages of proper shape and distortion as it passes from the top of the wheel to the bottom, and just as a rope will break after it is bent backward and forward for a considerable time, so will the tire break down—only, thanks to the excellent construction of the modern tire, even this abuse is withstood for many a long mile.

It is so simple to know the proper inflation for a tire that there is no excuse for not keeping it at the correct pressure. The methods used by many in pumping a tire, such as kicking the tire or observing its roundness at the point of contact with the ground, are disastrous if long tire life is desired. It is impossible to accurately [illegible] the gauge should be used. These are inexpensive, and if only used on one shoe would repay their cost. Having the gauge, it is only necessary to know the correct pressure to which the tire should be inflated. This also, is simple, as there is a very easy rule to follow.

Inflate the tire to twenty times the cross sectional diameter.

That is, in a 34x4 tire, the correct inflation will be eighty pounds, in a 30x3, the inflation would be sixty pounds, and in a 35x4½, it would be ninety pounds. This is a simple rule and one which cannot readily be forgotten.

ALL TIRES ARE POROUS.

After knowing the correct pressure and after the inflation is made, the next important part of the procedure is to keep the inflation correct. This can be done by frequent use of the gauge. It is in the maintenance of the pressure that the motorists generally fall down, not in the original inflation, as this is generally done correctly.

It must be remembered that all rubber tires are porous. The air will escape gradually through these pores, and in this connection there is a very interesting fact.

Air, as is universally known, is composed of a mixture of gases, including nitrogen, oxygen and carbon-dioxide, among a great many other ingredients. It has been noticed that the oxygen and the carbon-dioxide leak through the pores of the rubber much faster than does the nitrogen. The result of this is that after the tire is inflated for the first time, the carbon dioxide and the oxygen will escape, leaving the air remaining in the tire much richer in nitrogen. As the tire is inflated several times, the air contained in the tube becomes richer and richer in nitrogen and leakage is noticeably slower. It has been said that every tire is a small nitrogen factory. The important fact to remember, however, is that since the rubber is porous, it will be necessary to re-inflate the tires frequently and at the beginning of each day's journey, the tire should be gauged.

SOME SIMPLE RULES ON CARE OF TIRES

The rules for cutting down tire expense are easily laid down, because they are all plain common sense when closely analyzed. They may be enumerated as follows:

1. Use the proper size tire for the weight of the car. Secure expert advice regarding the use of oversize and use them if recommended.
2. Never drive the car unless the tires are inflated to the proper pressure.
3. Avoid driving in ruts and car tracks as much as possible.
4. Repair the small cuts in the tire casing as they apppear.
5. See that wheels are properly aligned
6. Easy starting and stopping is necessary to prolong tire life, and avoid excessive speeds, especially in warm weather.
7. In making tire changes, whenever it is possible or convenient, put the new tire on the rear and shift rear tire to front wheel on opposite side of car.

Next to underinflation the greatest destroyer of tires is overloading. An overloaded tire acts very much in the same way that an underinflated tire does. The walls of the shoe are overstressed, and the result is that the tire disintegrated rapidly. Sometimes it is the practice of those who use tires which are too small for the car to try to overcome the difficulties of overloading by using overinflation. The results are possibly better than without the excess pressure, but the stresses are above what the tire is designed to endure, and the result is that the mileage still drop far below normal. The stressing and rubbing of the materials produce a friction between the layers of fabric and material which go to make up the structure and considerable heat is generated. This puts the rubber in such a condition that it rapidly disintegrates.

It has become a growing custom for motorists who tour with a large passenger load or who use their cars in rough country to use the so-called oversize tires. These tires fit on the normal rim size, but are larger both in peripheral diameter and in sectional diameter. The 34 by 4-inch tire has an oversize of ½ by ⅝, which will fit on the same rim. In the same way the 30 by 3 size can use the 31 by 3½, and the 37 by 5 can use the 38 by 5½. The oversize is arrived at by adding one inch to the peripheral diameter and one-half inch to the cross sectional diameter as indicated in the examples shown.

It is also possible for the driver to reduce the tire bill by using a little care in steering the car. It is customary with many drivers to keep the car on the trolley tracks when any such tracks are available. This is excusable, perhaps, when the road through which the tracks are laid is composed of rough cobble or some other rough surfacing material; on the other hand, driving continuously on the car tracks will materially shorten the life of the tire.

Of course, glass is universally avoided, but there are other things that are just as apt to be destructive as glass, in fact even more so. One of these is the trolley track frog or switch. Where the two tracks cross each other there is generally a point where the edge of the track tapers down to a sharp edge. This edge will cut into the surface of the tire as would a knife. This is especially true in wet weather, and wet rubber cuts much easier than does dry, and the amount of damage that is done annually by one of these edges of track projecting above the road in a prominent highway, is above estimate. Sharp rocks, small stones and bits of china will all be avoided by an alert and careful driver.

One of the ways in which a motorist can keep down his repair bill is to take care of the small cuts in the tire casings as they appear. These little cuts are the entering points for water and sand which disrupt the tires and cause them to rot. Vulcanization is the only way to heal them permanently, but there are plastic compounds of rubber which can be used without a vulcanizing outfit, and which will safeguard the cut against becoming an entering point for the water and sand. Every car owner who desires to keep down the bills should either have the small cuts vulcanized as they appear or should have a small vulcanizing outfit for [illegible] do the work as it appears necessary.

It is very good practice with the outer casings to shift them to the forward wheels after it becomes necessary to have a new front tire. The right rear should be shifted to the left forward and left rear to the right forward. In that way the new tire is always applied to the rear of the car, where it is most needed, and the front tires are supplied by the partially worn ones from the rear. When in a system in working correctly, a great many more miles in a season will be secured with a given outlay.

One point which must be watched, in speaking of the front tires, and that is the alignment of the wheels. If the front axle is bent, or for some other reason the front tires are out of line, it is possible to wear out a shoe in as little as 500 miles. Even a small bend in the axle or a small misalignment in the wheels will make a very noticeable difference in the wear of the tire.

Misusing the brakes, letting the clutch in with a jerk and any other driving methods which tend to put sudden stresses on the tires are detrimental to long life. The car should be driven easily and gently, allowed to come to rest gradually and to be gradually accelerated. All this will make a material difference in tire life. Driving a car at thirty-five miles an hour over a hot road in the deadly heat of summertime will also tend to quickly destroy the tire.

AT SHEEPSHEAD NEXT WEEK

Anticipated That Records Will Go by the Board at Several Distances.

[illegible] will [illegible] the opening of the motor racing season at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway some twenty odd drivers will then [illegible] Metropolitan [illegible] mark [illegible] will [illegible] other events, namely, the Cobe's Cup, the [illegible] race, the Coney Island cup, the twenty-mile distance and the consolation race at the ten-mile mark for the William K. [illegible].

The entrants represent the best of racing drivers and racing cars in America, and the Metropolitan race [illegible] something of what speed and what competition may be anticipated at the Indianapolis race on May 30.

It is confidently believed that the men in this contest will reach pretty close to the record time, and more than one man is anxious to eclipse the [illegible] record.

The list of entrants shows the most formidable array of speed talent that ever faced the starter on any track in this country. Only one prominent driver is missing, that being Ralph De Palma, whose car is not yet in shape.

Several foreign built cars are entered. Included among the many entrants are Dario Resta, Eddie Rickenbacker, Johnny Aitken, Jack LeCain, Billy Chandler, Dave Lewis, Joseph Charlsatens, Carl Limburg, Aldo Franchi, Grover Bergdoll, Bert Watson and Eddie O'Donnell.

Has Done Excellent Work in Protecting Rights of Motorists

Massachusetts State Automobile Association and Its Affiliated Bodies Have Ever Safeguarded Interests of Motorists and Should Have Active Support of All Motor Owners.

By J. C. KERRISON.

Perhaps no one particular motor organization has done more to safeguard and advance the interests of the motorists of this Commonwealth than has the Massachusetts State Automobile Association.

Although appearing but little in the limelight, this organization, affiliated with the American Automobile Association and whose membership comprises all of the leading motoring organizations in the State, has done no end of work to prevent the enactment of obnoxious laws affecting the motorist.

The Massachusetts State Automobile Association was brought into being through the activities of such men as the late Lewis R. Speare of Boston, W. H. Chase of Leominster, J. P. Coghlin of Worcester, the late Stanley Haynes of Springfield and Eliot C. Lee of Boston. These men labored hard and diligently, bringing into touch one with the other the representatives of the various automobile clubs throughout the State so that they may meet and unite on certain action which have have for its purpose the betterment of the motor class. They did this, too, at a time when prejudice was against the motorists and anything representative of their class was carried to an excessive degree, and those who owned motor cars were looked upon as fit subjects for the jails and for asylums.

The work these men performed did much towards bringing the legal authorities to a realization that all motorists were not criminally inclined and that they are just as human as other classes.

Were it not for this association and its allied organizations, such for instance as the Bay State Automobile [illegible] the Worcester Automobile [illegible] Springfield Automobile [illegible] Club and the Automobile Associations of Leominster, Fitchburg, Attleboro and other cities throughout the Commonwealth and the National Highway Association, it is believed that a great amount of obnoxious legislation would be enacted each succeeding year, so that instead of enjoying equal rights on the roads with all other vehicles, motors would be hampered with unnecessary, and many believe, unconstitutional laws and regulations.

Nothing so impresses the members of the Legislature of a State as numbers. It is estimated that there are more than 100,000 motorists in Massachusetts, and yet of this number less than 2,500 are affiliated with motoring organizations, and while their representations to the Legislature and to other bodies may be decidedly strong, they do not carry with them today as much force as they would carry were they 50,000 strong.

The association has done particularly fine work in the past and is to continue it in the future. They believe that the duty of all motorists is to stand up and be counted by becoming identified with some regular organized association.

The Massachusetts Bay State Automobile Association at its meeting on May 18 proposes to plan a campaign [illegible] for its purpose the increasing [illegible] membership and the members [illegible] of its organization. This is [illegible] only to make appreciative, and secondly, to his selfishness in protecting his own personal interests.

GASOLINE ONCE A DESPISED ARTICLE

It is interesting to note how a despised and perhaps, for the time, a harmful by-product, may develop into the chief product of an industry, and a shortage seriously affect the general comfort and economy of our lives.

Just now gasoline is an every-day example. In the time of the early coal-oil lamp, many dangers lurked in the poorly refined oil, and every effort was made to increase the yield of high-flash kerosene and remove for this reason gasoline from the oil. This gasoline was then little more than a waste product, to be disposed of when possible or thrown away and allowed to evaporate, or even run into the rivers with the resulting danger of fire. Now all is changed, and the utmost effort of the chemist and engineer is [illegible] for to devise methods increasing the yield of this despised by-product at the expense of the higher boiling fractions in the crude oil.

Cole Distributor Keeps in Telephonic Touch with the Factory.

Strenuous work in all departments of the Cole Factory has been necessary to keep the production of Eights up to the tremendous demand. Although nearly four times the number of cars are being shipped daily, the demand has increased in even greater proportions. The Cole Motor Company of Boston is receiving its cars by express as well as by freight, this being found absolutely necessary on account of the shortage of freight cars in the West.

In order to keep in closest possible touch with the factory, Conrad A. Smith is holding daily telephone conversation with Indianapolis, so that everything is being done to facilitate the delivery of cars.

Fortunately, a large order for Cole Big Sixes was placed early in the season and the Cole Motor Company of Boston is able to make immediate deliveries on this model. Take "Six" in the Cole de luxe product and surpasses in quality, construction and design any other car within several hundred dollars of the price.

Daytona, Fla., May 6.—Myt the things that the wold waves are saying! They are still foaming and lashing with excitement over the speed that a Hud on "Super-Six" stock chassis on Goodrich Silvertown tires made along the Ormond-Daytona beach. It was a new record—a mile in 37 1-5, 100 seconds, or 102⅘ miles per hour faster than the fastest mile the waves have ever witnessed.

The Hudson, tested at 79.4 horsepower at 2,400 revolutions per minute. Some travelling for a stock chassis in the surf sports. The mermaids all want to go joy riding in it now. No more slow, lowy c t tonneaus for them. And Davies will just head over tails in love with those beautiful black treaded Silvertown tires that helped the Hudson make such record-breaking headway

VELIE EXPERIENCES A WIDE DEMAND

The fact that the Belgian, German, French and all other European automobile factories have been taken over by their respective governments for the manufacture of war supplies has caused a shortage of cars in all countries heretofore supplied through the European sources of supply. As a result American manufacturers are experiencing an enlarged demand from all quarters of the globe.

The farmers in Europe, Asia, Australasia, China, Egypt, or wherever he may be depends upon the past reputation of the manufacturer and [illegible] secure his tractor as much as [illegible] in buying horses. SHE'S THERE BECAUSE SHE PERFORMS—THE 3400 r. p. m. CHALMERS

Most cars start alike. But very few finish alike. Therein comes a mighty difference.

Step on the little button 10 months after date and you'll readily note the inequality.

One is sluggish, "dead", without emotion, and responds to the touch with the speed of old-time oxen responding to the lash.

The other is alive, alert, ready; radiates desire to plunge ahead.

This is the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers kind. The other kind is the species known to the trade as "one-year" cars.

Chalmers makes a five-year car. There's many an old 1909 Chalmers 30 Blue Bird giving a good account of itself today. You'll find the everlasting pep there five years from the day you take your first turn at the wheel.

Largely because of the 3400 r. p. m. engine. Which delivers mighty power with easy effort.

It's mostly in the design. The pistons are aluminum, about two pounds lighter per piston; the reciprocating parts lighter, which eases up the thrust on the bearings.

Then the crank-shaft, which is very heavy, and balanced to the weight of a hair in a special Chalmers device, spins at the rate of 3400 revolutions per minute.

It means excellent reserve power. For at 10 miles an hour the engine is turning up only 500 r. p. m. while at 20 she is doing about 1000 r. p. m. So that at excessive road speed she has the punch to deliver when called upon.

10% of her power is used at 10 miles an hour. So that she has 60% to 84%—when a twisting, hilly road looms ahead, when a sharp corner with a rugged grade hoves in sight; when the man ahead is showing you too much dust.

You'll like the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers for one single little reason. She sure can perform.

Ask your dealer about Chalmers service inspection coupons, negotiable at all Chalmers dealers everywhere. This system is a most important consideration in buying your car.

Studebaker

Take the Judgment of the City that knows how cars are BUILT—and the State that knows how cars PERFORM!

There's no surer judgment, no more trustworthy advice to be had anywhere than that of Detroit and the State of California.

In Detroit

the city that produces three-fourths of the country's cars—where people know cars from the technical and manufacturing sides better than they do in any other city on earth—more Studebakers were registered according to official figures in the year of 1915, than any other cars selling at more than $500.

In California

the State of wonderful roads and weather—the State where people have more miles of good roads to drive over and more opportunity to use their cars than in any other State in the Union—the official figures for the year of 1915 showed 15,718 Studebakers registered—2,895 MORE than any other car listing at more than $500.

California KNOWS cars from use on the roads—Detroit knows cars from having the bulk of the industry centered in its limits. Both have made Studebaker favorite by a long lead. What better judgment can YOU follow in buying?

And the reason is simply that every time a man makes even the barest comparison of a Studebaker with other cars, he finds that to get as much power, size and quality as a Studebaker offers, he must pay from $450 to $400 MORE. So they're buying Studebakers—and SAVING that $250. Why don't you see the cars—then go make that $250-saving comparison.

MITCHELL EIGHT HAS NEW BODY

257 CARS IN ONE

Mitchell

$1325 F. O. B. RACINE
With 127-inch Wheelbase

26 Extra Features

All Paid for Through 10,000 Factory Savings Made Possible by John W. Bate—The Efficiency Expert

In this Mid-Year Mitchell we have many new things to show you. All the best ideas which were brought out in 257 New York Show models. And 26 extras, unique to the Mitchell. Don't miss this car.

The construction of the chassis in the Mitchell is uniform. We have spent 13 years in developing it. And we cannot hope to greatly improve it.

But a hundred designers—experts and artists—are evolving new ideas in body and equipment. And our chief effort is to keep ahead of the rest.

Our Composite Car

This year we took a new task. We brought out this Mid-Year model—our second for 1916.

We held its completion until after the New York Show. There we saw all the new ideas and touches. And we learned what people liked best.

Then we combined in this new model 73 things that folks wanted. Of these, 26 are unique to the Mitchell—either exclusive or very rare.

So you will find this New Mitchell, in scores of ways, the most interesting car on the market.

The Prize Design

This body design stood out first at the Show. It was voted by women—and by men—the handsomest touring model ever created.

Body styles are like women's styles. The designer's favorite is often unpopular. The only way to get a winner is to take a vote—as we did.

As a result of that vote—covering 257 models—we have a design which will concede first place among cars of this season.

So with every new idea and equipment. They are not merely our conceptions. They are all what people liked best at the Shows.

Exclusive Extras

Then this Mitchell includes 26 extra features—things other cars don't offer.

All are wanted—all are things you'd miss. But they are costly and unusual. So most makers ignore them, or else list them as extras.

We believe that fine cars of this day should embody all known comforts and conveniences. So we add all we learn of or invent.

We will let you decide, when we point out these extras, if you would wish any left out.

John W. Bate Pays for All of Them

These extras don't show in the price of the Mitchell. In fact, no other car of this size and grade sells at the Mitchell price.

All of these extras are paid for by factory savings. And those savings are due to John W. Bate, the efficiency expert.

Mr. Bate built this plant, covering 45 acres. He equipped it with 2092 modern machines. He builds in this plant 98 per cent of this car, under Bate efficiency methods.

He builds it for half what it would have cost, even five years ago. He builds it for less than any other factory could build a similar car. And for 20 per cent less than any factory which buys a large share of its parts.

This is the model factory of America building high-grade cars. John W. Bate has worked out 10,000 savings. That is the reason for all these Mitchell extras.

This is the only car with Bate Cantilever springs, which double the ease of riding.

This is the car which 37 noted engineers have selected for their personal car.

This is the car which holds the world's road endurance records. Six Mitchell cars have averaged 164,372 miles each—an average 30-year service.

Every motor car enthusiast should come and inspect this car.

With high-speed economical six-cylinder engine of enormous power, wheelbase, 127 in.; anti-skid tires on rear, complete equipment, including engine driven tire pump, reversible headlights, etc.

OWEN MAGNETIC

"The Car of a Thousand Speeds"

Good-Bye Gears—

Engineers for years have sought a smooth flow of power from motor to road. Their search has led from 4 cylinders to 12 in vain.

For change-speed gears remained.

However great the power, however uninterrupted the impulses of the engine—heavy clashing, jerking gears have intervened to break the flexibility.

Now gears are overcome.

The Owen Magnetic substitutes the resistless, elastic tenacity of magnetism for the steel-hard, rigid interplay of gear-teeth.

And it substitutes a little finger lever on the steering wheel for the awkward, heavy-working shifts of other times.

So here, at last, is flexibility—and true control. A thousand speeds that flow into each other under the touch of your hand. An epoch-making achievement is compelling electricity to serve gas power. Transmission, starting, braking, lighting, all are provided by the same dependable magneto unit. Moreover, from all this comes greater efficiency—more mileage for tires and gasoline—longer life to the car.

New Driving is a Delight

Coach makers have paralleled this triumph of science in a triumph of design. Not even foreign cars have distinction, style and beauty which can more than compare.

Bodies in stock and to order by great carriage builders, on chassis built and equipped by the Baker R. & L. Company, allied—both in finances and manufacturing—with the General Electric Company.

INSIDE STORY OF THE $50,000 SPEAKER DEAL TOLD BY M'ROY

Cleveland Club Secretary Gives Sunday American Readers Real Workings of Greatest Trade in Baseball History

M'ROY'S OWN STORY OF GREATEST BALL TRADE IN HISTORY

Business Manager of Cleveland Team Tells for First Time the Inside Facts Concerning Speaker Deal With the Red Sox.

This is the first inside story of the Tris Speaker deal, written exclusively for the readers of the Boston Sunday AMERICAN by Robert B. McRoy, the MAN WHO PUT THE DEAL THROUGH. McRoy, who is business manager of the Cleveland baseball club, was secretary of the Red Sox during the McAleer regime. He is one of the most influential men in organized baseball and before becoming publicly identified with any club was secretary to President Ban Johnson of the American League.

By ROBERT B. McROY
Business Manager Cleveland Baseball Club.

Ting-a-ling-ling.

The telephone bell rang sharply close to my elbow. I had been debating the American League situation in general and the Cleveland ball team in particular in my mind, and I was somewhat disturbed by the loud ringing of the bell. I took my own good time in picking up the receiver. Had I had any inkling of the message that was to be conveyed to me, I would have beaten all records in answering the phone.

Hello! Is that you, McRoy? was the query that came over the wire.

Yes, what's wanted? I replied.

I thought you might be interested to know that there isn't a chance for Cleveland to secure Outfielder Clarence Walker from the St. Louis Browns.

It was a Cleveland newspaperman talking. He had been tipped off to the fact that we had been negotiating with St. Louis for the purchase of Walker.

FIRST NEWS OF BIG BOSTON DEAL.

Of course, I was interested, as we had figured Walker might help our club. But that very afternoon, Thursday, April 6, I had been advised by Manager Lee Fohl not to do anything on Walker until he had talked matters over with me.

"What's St Louis done with him?" I asked.

"Told him to the Boston Red Sox," was the reply. "Say, it looks like Lannin is having trouble coming to terms with Tris Speaker after all, doesn't it," he continued.

"Maybe he is," I replied in an offhand way, but, believe me, I was thinking on a tall scale. "Much obliged for the information," I replied as I hung up the receiver

The Great Question of Securing Speaker

Speaker, Speaker, SPEAKER! That was the only thing that came to my mind. Gee, what if I could land him for Cleveland the Indians would be a real ball club. Would Boston sell him? I debated the question pro and con.

It occurred to me that Philadelphia could take millions to the White Sox for the privilege of securing Speaker, but I knew Cleveland had sold to Jackson. Perhaps Lannin might be willing to sell Speaker.

I decided to take a chance on putting a deal over. I knew from reports from the Cotton States and New Orleans that the Indians were a fair ball club.

Speaker would take them a long ways. I put in a call for Jesse C. Burns, president of the Chesapeake League at Indianapolis. I finally got him on the long distance and I put Cobb across squarely up to him, and he responded like the good game sport he is.

There Is No Limit; Go and Get Sox Star

"We're in baseball as a business and the prospects for a prosperous season are not overly bright with our present lineup," I told Mr. Burns. "I think there's a chance for us to deal with the Boston Red Sox for Tris Speaker. They've bought Walker from St. Louis, which makes it look as if Lannin has already made up his mind to sell or trade Tris.

He's a wonderful ball player, good for an all-around fourth outfielder from a second division club, and I'm willing to make a long distance phone position. Shall I go East and let you handle it?"

What's the limit? queried the Cleveland lawyer.

I don't know, but he'll come high was the reply.

You go get him, were Dunn's parting words.

What's the limit, I asked.

There is no limit. Go as high as the sky if necessary. It's on your own statement, Dunn said.

That was enough for me. I had exactly thirty minutes to make train connections for New York, where Lannin was at the time. But I was not worried about the limit of my limit had been taken off.

I had sent out for an afternoon paper, but I saw no notice of the sale of Walker to the Red sox, and I had misgivings as to the deal going through.

On my way to the train, however, I bought a later edition, and sure enough, there it was in cold black type: "Walker sold to the Red Sox."

I dreamed of Speaker and Lannin all night and I guess if truth be told I also had visions of a United States mint going from Cleveland to Boston and an American League flag and a championship hunting floating from that staff. But I at League Park, Cleveland.

I arrived in New York early Friday morning, and it didn't take me long to be the owner of the Boston-Cleveland deal to the morning papers that a deal was on between the Red Sox and Yankees whereby the latter club was to turn over Fritz Maisel and a large sum of money to Boston in exchange for Speaker.

I thought it might be too late, but I hadn't talked to Lannin five minutes when he disabused my mind along these lines.

I asked him point blank if he would sell Speaker, and he replied he might consider the right kind of an offer. Said offer would entail money and players, the former in an enormous amount, and the latter, two in number. We talked the matter all day Friday, late into the night and finally the next morning we came to terms.

Those terms were $50,000 and two players, Pitcher Sam Jones, whom Manager Bill Carrigan of the Red Sox insisted on having, and either Hill Wambsganss or Fred Thomas, Infielders

How the Greatest Deal Was Put Through.

Carrigan wanted Joe Evans, third baseman, at first, but I insisted I would have to talk the matter over of the players involved with Manager Fohl first, especially if they insisted on it and Fielder Jones decided that Jones and Wamby or Thomas would do.

That's cited it as far as I was concerned, for I felt certain that Manager Fohl would willingly part with the two players mentioned if he could secure a star like Speaker. And I was right in my reckoning, too, for Fohl readily agreed to the transfer.

I believe the Boston club with $5,000 of any club mixed in and the Cleveland club would willingly have given a check for this amount to Boston and received title to Jones. As for Thomas, the man finally picked by Boston, he is surely worth the big league waiver price of $2,500

Add this to $50,000 cash which we paid Boston and you have a total of $52,500. The largest amount ever paid for a ball player.

Heretofore the Chicago-Philadelphia deal for Eddie Collins, a $75,000 transaction held the record.

STRANGE ROMANCE OF GIRL'S SLAYER

Elliott Sought to Express His Love for Girl He Afterward Killed by Reading Old Volume

Discovery of Bullet in Brain of Slayer Gives New Turn to Case; May Die at Any Moment

Thompson, Ct., May 6—A text book more than one hundred years old with covers partly gone and leaves frayed at the corners and yellow with age played a part in the murder here last Tuesday of Miss Sybil Pettis, a school teacher, and her father, Burton A. Pettis, a prosperous builder, by John A. Elliott, a farm hand, who is dangerously ill from a compound fracture of the skull in a cell at the Windham County Jail, in Brooklyn.

An operation performed on Elliott to relieve pressure upon the brain by removing a piece of the fractured skull was performed yesterday by Dr. Lucius Porter, Dr. Frederick Tucker, Dr. George Burroughs of Danielson performed the operation. At its close Dr. Burroughs, jail physician said:

"We were surprised to discover as we probed for fragments over the prisoner's left ear was caused by a bullet. The bullet, the head was more than an inch square, all gradually rounded and tapered the farther down we probed. It was impossible to locate the bullet.

BULLET IN BAD PLACE.

"From what we found, extremely doubtful if Elliott will live. It is a serious injury. The bullet is in a bad place. If he grows stronger it might be traced by an X-Ray. But of this the man will last very long. He may pass away in twenty-four hours or last day, and there is a remote possibility that he may pull through, but I doubt it.

"We thought at first he must have shot himself but the wound showed no traces of powder or burning. It was a bullet from a weapon fired at some distance."

How Elliott received the wound is a mystery. It is known that Pettis had no chance to shoot him.

Elliott loved Sybil Pettis, but kept his infatuation for the college girl secret for months.

Elliott loved the college girl. He kept his infatuation secret for months. The girl met him twice daily when he hitchhiked her home every morning at the Cunningham shed near the trolley station in West Thompton, and hitched it up again for her after school in the late afternoon.

She spoke pleasantly and treated him with kindness. She gave him a necktie Christmas and often gave him candy. After a while, John Elliott, forty-four, a prison record for shooting a rival in a love affair twenty years before, took courage.

TOOK PAINS WITH DRESS.

He began to spend more time in front of the kitchen mirror combing his hair and washing his face and hands before Sybil came. His eyes danced in anticipation of her arrival and he was always on the driveway. He took more pains with his clothes. Farmers in the neighborhood began to call him a "dandy" and twitted him about his "courting suit."

All of which was intended only as pleasant banter because everybody knew Sybil Pettis, the graduate of normal school who finished her education at Amherst and who held offices in the local grange, the Daughters of Liberty and the Camp Fire girls, who went to the annual socials with the best young men in the village, would never think of John Elliott any more seriously than as a hired man whom she was obliged to show kindness in her journeys to and from school.

But John Elliott liked the courting talk. It gave him courage. Finally he used the ask Sybil to buy tobacco for him when she went to Webster. He used to try to induce her to keep the change. This provoked her.

There is no doubt that a girl of the ambition and intelligence of Sybil Pettis never gave Elliott real encouragement, but there is incontrovertible evidence that Sybil Pettis innocently brought doom on herself and her father.

SENT HIM POST CARDS

The girl, with the buoyancy that made her popular, snapped John Elliott's picture and sent him prize

ORPET FEELS CERTAIN OF ACQUITTAL

Expect Difficulty in Picking Jury to Try the Youth Accused of Giving Marian Lambert Poison

Waukegan, Ill., May 6. Will Orpet, the young University of Wisconsin student, is absolutely confident of acquittal on the charge of murdering his sweetheart, Marion Lambert.

[illegible] the case will be given to the jury [illegible] Orpet will be free to return to the side of his fiancee, against the charge which has caused him so much grief and anguish.

As Mr. [illegible] the defense [illegible] appeared but there is not a [illegible] of serious concern [illegible] Orpet's attorneys [illegible] that the state has failed to prove [illegible] case, if of any interpretations, even for meals. He has been warned that his eyesight will be seriously damaged but has failed to heed his advisers.

According to Orpet's friends, he has been completely metamorphosed since being confined in jail on the charge of forcing trusting Marion Lambert to take cyanide of potassium at Lake Forest on March 10. Although he is said to have stood well in his studies and to have been proud of his Alma Mater, Orpet was never considered a sport.

He found a great deal of time to devote to Marion Lambert, and it is said that he also found time for other affairs. He was also interested in sports and was little addicted to shutting himself up in a room and delving into text books.

He has changed in another way, and that is in his disinclination to talk. When first arrested the student was only too willing to make statements to the newspapers, although admonished by counsel not to do so. Of late, however, he has become taciturn and reserved, and even when taking a temporary vacation from his books has nothing to say.

Orpet's defence will be that Marion Lambert committed suicide. He will claim that he did not love the girl, and that when he left her in the woods on the fatal day, after acquainting her with that fact, she was very much alive.

Orpet will claim that the girl, broken hearted over the refusal to continue his relations with her or fearful that she was about to become a mother ended her troubles by swallowing the poison. He will maintain that she called to him as I that when he turned back he found her body lying on the snow beside their trysting tree.

HARD TO PICK JURY.

Attorneys for Orpet have agreed to have the trial in Waukegan and no fight will be made to take it elsewhere.

Difficulty is expected in getting a jury because of the wide publicity given the case.

Judge Charles H. Donnelly of Woodstock, who will hear the case, admitted today that at least 150 veniremen probably will have to be called to get a jury. Deputy Sheriff E. [illegible] Green thinks this estimate is too low. He said 2,000 veniremen will be required.

The last man hanged in Lake County was Chris Rafferty, who killed a Chicago policeman. It took 2,000 veniremen for that jury.

The State will call sixty-six witnesses. The trial may last a month.

Long Lost Granddaughter of Quebec Man Will Share in His Estate, Valued at $14,000,000

Haverhill, May 6. — The days of wonders are not past, according to Mrs. Mary Nerdreau of No. 39 Oak street, who, by a stroke of a pen, was transformed from a laundress into an heiress.

The little woman, who has learned that she is one of the heirs to a $14,000,000 estate left by her grandfather, Jean B. L'Ecuyer of Ste. Martha, P. Q., is as yet hardly convinced that there is not some magic in it.

After years of hard labor in a local laundry, she has suddenly become independently wealthy, and is now making preparations to start for Canada with her mother, Mrs. Matilda Larbour of Marlboro.

PLATO'S chief work, "The Republic," is one of the world's greatest books. His two chapters on men of the cave show the life of every man. These two short chapters are the greatest in Plato's work. Read them on this page.

It is a satisfaction to put these chapters, so suggestive of thought, into the hands of the millions who see the Hearst Sunday newspapers.

Life is a dark cave; we human beings are its inhabitants. Our back is to the light, our faces toward the wall, upon which are reflected shadows of ourselves and other things. We see the shadows and judge everything by shadows. We do not really see each other or see the other things.

Plato's men of the cave sit chained so that they cannot turn their necks or move.

They have lived thus from childhood.

Behind them as they sit chained there is a wall. The top of the wall is reflected upon the wall in front of the cave men. A fire which supplies light and causes the shadows is still farther back above and beyond that wall.

Behind the wall, unseen, walk men carrying loads on their heads. The loads represent various activities, and the shadows of them are thrown upon the wall.

The men of the cave sit with their backs to the Light. They keep their eyes fixed on the wall in front of them and watch the shadows.

There is an echo in the cave, and as the men chained speak to each other their voices are echoed back from the cave wall and they imagine that the shadows are speaking.

They see shadows, they hear shadows. All of their thoughts and opinions are based on shadows.

WHAT THESE IMAGINARY MEN CHAINED IN THE DARK CAVE DO YOU AND ALL OF US DO IN OUR REAL LIFE.

We mistake the shadow for the substance, the echo for the real voice, and with all the certainty of the shadow watchers we say to each other "That shadow is the real thing, for I see it and I hear it. Nothing else is real. I know it, for that is all I have seen or ever heard. And I believe only what I see and hear."

What happens to one who escapes from the cave of shadows and comes back later to tell what he has seen and to spread new truths?

The man from the cave at first sees nothing and understands nothing but shadows.

The light dazzles him. But he sees shadows of trees on the ground and says to himself, "There, thank God, is something real." He sees shadows in the water and again recognizes reality. He can see the moon and stars and bear their light, then gradually real things in the sunlight, and finally he can look at the sun itself, at the pure truth. But it is a slow process, this turning from shadows to realities and seeing the substance instead of the shadow that it casts.

What happens to that man, escaped, when he returns to the cave to tell to his fellows chained what he has seen and heard?

They are patient at first, declaring him a lunatic. Then they become impatient when he persists in his "stupid folly," when he dares to call truth that which is so preposterous.

They say that this crazy traveler into a new realm has lost his sight. They decide that he must be chained and put back among them, and that anyone seeking to liberate him, drag him up the hill and out of the cave would deserve to be put to death.

This earth is that cave, and the inhabitants of the earth have always treated the teller of new truths as Plato's men of the cave treated him who came back to tell of the sunlight and the real world.

As they treated him, so the greatest power in Europe treated Galileo when he said that the earth moved around the sun; that he could see the moons of planets and that the reality was not the shadow that others saw.

He was made to go down on his knees and solemnly declare that the truths he told were false, and as he was treated so other tellers of truth have been treated, and are treated, and will be treated for years to come.

Eyes that see shadows cannot bear the light, minds that are ignorant cannot bear knowledge. But in spite of that the light breaks through, knowledge spreads and the number of those that escape from the cave of ignorance slowly increases.

In Plato's cave men you may find an answer for all of those that would put a limit to the power of man and his ultimate intellectual achievements. You may find especially an answer for those who say that what is to-day must always be, and to those agnostics, atheists and other cave dwellers who say you have no right to ask them to believe what they themselves have not seen nor heard.

"There is no God, no wise, benevolent government of this universe. All is chance, accident, I know it, for I see," says one.

Another says: "There is no hereafter, no immortality. Men fall as the leaves fall and go back into the ground. They die as the animals die. There is no soul, only reflex action; I know, for I have been watching for many years."

To these and to others you may say: "You are watching shadows, the shadows of your own thought. Your face is toward the wall, your back is toward the light—that very light which you say does not exist. You do not even know what you are yourself; you do not understand that the thing which you call you is nothing but the shell of the real being, the physical machine through which the spirit comes into contact with the physical world."

A world of caves and of Plato cave men is this world of ours. The great financier sits with his back to the light and watches the dollar mark on the wall—shadows of money—thinks that he is happy, and that is wealth.

The man in office with power that might be used for infinite good sits with his back toward the light, and watches the shadow of himself and says, "That is greatness."

When his son died and the world looked black Burke exclaimed, "What shadows we are and what shadows we pursue."

Plato said it in a nobler sense, more than two thousand years ago.

He was one of the greatest intellectual triumvirate the world has ever seen. Socrates, educated in the bitter school of experience and suffering, taught Plato, the rich young man. Plato studied diligently under Socrates and other teachers, lived a life of magnificent philosophical usefulness, and in his turn taught Aristotle, the greatest individual intellect, probably, that this earth has yet produced.

Socrates, Plato and Aristotle combined taught the human race.

In the book "The Republic of Plato" there is an intellectual education of great value to every man, the young lawyer especially, to him who desires to be an exact thinker.

As a public service, Hearst's International Library, No. 119 West Fortieth street, New York City, has published complete Professor Jowett's translation of "The Republic," with Jowett's analysis of the work. This work has been sold hitherto at $3.25. It may be purchased now for 50 cents, at book stores, or it can be ordered by sending 60 cents to Hearst's International Library, No. 119 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Needless to say, this work is not produced for profit, for there is no profit in its publication. We are glad to give to earnest men and women an opportunity to possess some of the really great books of the world. Hearst's International Library has already published Buckle's "History of Civilization in England," four volumes, for $1. It publishes an absolutely complete edition of Shakespeare's works and one of the best editions in existence for $1, and we offer you the best existing translation of "The Republic of Plato" for 50 cents, less than one-sixth of the price at which it has been sold hitherto. We shall be interested to see how many readers will avail themselves of this opportunity.

Meanwhile, read here Plato's two short chapters on the men in the cave. Remember that Plato writes in the form of a dialogue, making his teacher, Socrates, the principal speaker who begins the conversation.

And now, I said, let me show in a figure how far our nature is enlightened or unenlightened. Behold! human beings living in an underground den, which has a mouth open towards the light and reaching all along the den; here they have been from their childhood, and have their legs and necks chained so that they cannot move, and can only see before them, being prevented by the chains from turning round their heads. Above and behind them a fire is blazing at a distance, and between the fire and the prisoners there is a raised way; and you will see if you look a low wall built along the way, like the screen which marionette players have in front of them, over which they show the puppets.

I see.

And do you see, I said, men passing along the wall carrying all sorts of vessels, and statues and figures of animals made of wood and stone and various materials, which appear over the wall? Some of them are talking, others silent.

You have shown me a strange image, and they are strange prisoners.

Like ourselves, I replied; and they see only their own shadows, or the shadows of one another, which the fire throws on the opposite wall of the cave?

True, he said, how could they see anything but the shadows if they were never allowed to move their heads?

And of the objects which are being carried in like manner they would only see the shadows?

Yes, he said.

And if they were able to converse with one another, would they not suppose that they were naming what was actually before them?

Very true.

And suppose further that the prison had an echo which came from the other side, would they not be sure to fancy when one of the passers-by spoke that the voice which they heard came from the passing shadow?

No question, he replied.

To them, I said, the truth would be literally nothing but the shadows of the images.

That is certain.

And now look again, and see what will naturally follow if the prisoners are released and disabused of their error. At first, when any of them is liberated and compelled suddenly to stand up and turn his neck round and walk and look towards the light, he will suffer sharp pains; the glare will distress him, and he will be unable to see the realities of which in his former state he had seen the shadows; and then conceive some one saying to him that what he saw before was an illusion, but that now, when he is approaching nearer to being and his eye is turned toward more real existence, he has a clearer vision—what will be his reply? And you may further imagine that his instructor is pointing to the objects as they pass and requiring him to name them—will he not be perplexed? Will he not fancy that the shadows which he formerly saw are truer than the objects which are now shown to him?

Far truer.

And if he is compelled to look straight at the light, will he not have a pain in his eyes which will make him turn away to take refuge in the objects of vision which he can see, and which he will conceive to be in reality clearer than the things which are now being shown to him?

* * * * * * *

He will require to grow accustomed to the sight of the upper world. And first he will see the shadows best, next the reflections of men and other objects in the water, and then the objects themselves; then he will gaze upon the light of the moon and the stars and the spangled heaven; and he will see the sky and the stars by night better than the sun or the light of the sun by day?

Certainly.

Last of all he will be able to see the sun, and not mere reflections of him in the water, but he will see him in his own proper place, and not in another; and he will contemplate him as he is.

Certainly.

He will then proceed to argue that this is he who gives the season and the years, and is the guardian of all that is in the visible world, and in a certain way the cause of all things which he and his fellows have been accustomed to behold?

Clearly, he said, he would first see the sun and then reason about him.

And when he remembered his old habitation, and the wisdom of the den and his fellow-prisoners, do you not suppose that he would felicitate himself on the change, and pity them?

Certainly, he would.

* * * * * * *

Imagine once more, I said, such an one coming suddenly out of the sun to be replaced in his old situation; would he not be certain to have his eyes full of darkness?

To be sure, he said.

And if there were a contest, and he had to compete in measuring the shadows with the prisoners who had never moved out of the den, while his sight was still weak, and before his eyes had become steady (and the time which would be needed to acquire this new habit of sight might be very considerable), would he not be ridiculous? Men would say of him that up he went and down he came with his eyes; and that it was better not even to think of ascending; and if any one tried to loose another and lead him up to the light, let them only catch the offender, and they would put him to death.

No question, he said.

This entire allegory, I said, you may now append, dear Glaucon, to the previous argument; the prison-house is the world of sight, the light of the fire is the sun, and you will not misapprehend me if you interpret the journey upward to be the ascent of the soul into the intellectual world according to my poor belief, which, at your desire, I have expressed—whether rightly or wrongly God knows. But, whether true or false, my opinion is that in the world of knowledge the idea of good appears last of all, and is seen only with an effort; and, when seen, is also inferred to be the universal author of all things beautiful and right, parent of light and of the lord of light in this visible world, and the immediate source of reason and truth in the intellectual; and that this is the power upon which he who would act rationally either in public or private life must have his eye fixed.

The Duty of Press and Pulpit in Cultivating Americanism

By Rev. Charles A. Eaton,

IN the great war the issue lies between two ideals of government and of development. It is the German Empire against the British Empire—Autocracy against Democracy. Spiritually the French and British peoples are one. They are more than allies: they are brothers. Next Sunday Another Chapter of "The Mysteries of Myra," and New Reels.

Synopsis of Previous Chapters.

DR. PAYSON ALDEN, a physician, who has spent several years studying the occult, discovers that a band of devil worshippers are plotting to cause the death of Myra Maynard, an heiress, in order that her inheritance may fall to them. He has endeavored to warn her mother of the danger, but Mrs. Maynard, who still remembers the mysterious interest of her dead husband in the occult, and the curious suicides of her two older daughters on their eighteenth birthday, will not listen to his pleading.

Dr. Alden virtually burglarizes the Maynard residence, in order to learn of the mysterious sleep-walking of Myra. She is about to stab herself in a secret chamber of the house, obedient to the psychic commands of the Black Magicians, when he intervenes. Arthur Varney, a wealthy clubman, who is in love with Myra, is a member of the secret order. Struggling between his fear of the Black Master and his affection for the girl, he yields to the commands of his superior, and connives in the presentation of a flower for Myra's bed chamber, which blooms only at night.

Under the suggestion of the doctor Myra receives a warning from the spirit world to beware of the machinations of an unknown influence, but the interference of her mother interrupts the seance in which the girl, who is a natural "medium," has reached out into the unknown. Through the mysteries of crystal gazing, taught by the physician, she has become aware of a few facts concerning the mysterious band of devil worshippers.

Dr. Alden comes to the residence to remain on guard during the crucial night, and he is prompted by a curious premonition to ask that the flower bought by her suitor be placed in his bedroom. During the evening, after he has gone to sleep, the petals open, dropping upon the damp earth of the pot a powder which generates a deadly vapor. Myra's crystal gazing warns her of her guardian's danger and she saves him from death by a narrow margin.

A Black Order Initiation.

THE forebodings of Payson Alden, psychic detective, were only too well founded!

For the hating of luckless Myra Maynard by the scoundrels of the demoniac occult had only begun. The battle was now on in bitter earnest.

Even as the physician and the girl whom he was guarding slept through the bright hours of the early Spring morning the machinations of the Black Magicians were at work.

All was silent within the dismal shades of the secret grotto of the Black Order, save for the incoherent incantations of a lone worshipper before the centre altar.

On his knees was a tattered book, its pages of ancient parchment scrawled finely with cabalistic words of some infernal language.

His left hand traced queer symbols in the heavy air, dank with the odor of incense, as he murmured the ritual in a droning monotone.

Just then came three knocks from the direction of the iron barred lodge portal behind him.

Two answering knocks he gave, and then cautiously opened a tiny slit in the door. A murmur of subdued pass-words ensued. A grimy hand appeared proffering a large white envelope.

The lodge-keeper accepted this with a grunt of surprise, and scrutinized the address after he had clanged the small opening which shut out the dim light from the outer passage.

Inside the white envelope, which he feverishly tore open, was a black one addressed simply in white ink:

"THE MASTER."

He hurried toward the velvet-draped doorway of the inner shrine to grope for an instant in the darkness within.

A dim, red glow from no apparent source of luminosity became apparent, revealing the face of the Master, cheeks resting upon clenched hands, thumbs upturned—the symbol of the devil-worshippers. The celebrant answered the sign after making a profound obeisance.

"Why are my meditations disturbed?" rasped the voice of the evil pontiff.

"A black message, Master," and the envelope was handed to him, not without a trembling of the speaker's fingers.

The leader of the black cult leered menacingly and opened the missive. Its message was written in white upon black paper.

"Your plan did not work and he is beginning to suspect the order. Faithfully,

"VARNEY."

The Master's quizzical face twisted into a momentary spasm of fury, and the cabal immediately

ONE of the smartest gatherings of Boston equestriennes was seen at the recent Brookline Riding Show given for charity. In the younger class of girls were the Misses Peggy Porter on "Frisky," Penelope Curtis on "Little Minister," Eloise Singleton on "Vim," Miriam McGregor on "Midnight Star," Margaret Curtis on "Lorna Doone" and Rosamond Adie on "Sunbeam." Miss Adie and Miss Singleton were prize winners in Class 1. All these younger riders will later make their debut as members of Boston's fashionable society. Riding and driving are accomplishments of nearly all the debutantes of recent years. Miss Elinor Quincy also was among the riders who gave an interesting exhibition.

By MRS. C. H. WASHBURN

NATURALLY, after society's activities during Easter week, which included for fashionable Boston a plethora of weddings and the excitement following the announcements of several prominent engagements, the one which followed was indeed doubly dull and void, a decided lull after the heavy storm. Rarely has an Easter week been so filled with events, some wholly unexpected, in which so many members of the fashionable world were involved and so keenly interested a banner one to go on record.

The four Vincent Club matinees made the largest and most appreciated diversion for the week, and the cleverness of Miss McAllister's operetta, the players, the stage settings so aglow with color and brilliant effects, and the various new features so capitally done, made the chief subject of talk and conversation for society gathered. The audiences filled the cosy Wilbur on each afternoon are distinctly representative as well as large.

The next excitement for the fashionable world will be the May weddings. There are an unusual number of them, which goes to show that the old superstition is losing its effect and is dying out, as it should. It is really a good month for brides if one stops to think. It comes before the final exodus from town, and it catches the first freshness of the Spring in verdure and bloom, and escapes the heat of June, which oftentimes burns as fiercely as in mid summer.

Prominent among the brides who have chosen May for their month comes, first, Miss Grozier, whose marriage to Mr. Parley is on Thursday of this week. Miss Elliot's and Mr. Burnham's is down for Saturday, the 20th. Miss Rantoul's and Mr. Murray's will follow ten days later, on Tuesday, the 30th, both weddings to be celebrated on the North Shore. Miss Harrington's and Mr. Haydock's, which comes on the last day of the month, will be the only town one among the important ceremonials, and at the Arlington Street Church. The June brides are too numerous to mention collectively; individually, they have been recorded in these columns before.

Besides these events of society to bring members of it back to town if they are at their country homes, are the Country Club races, Thursday and Saturday, at Brookline on June 15th and 17th, which promise unusual excitement for lovers of the sport this year, and Class Day, with the brick tea for its street feature, the following Tuesday, the 20th. These will close the exceptionally long season in town, with the exception of Miss Rotch's and Mr Storrow's wedding on the 21st.

THE FAY-SCHIRMER WEDDING IN JUNE.

BOSTON society is equally interested with that of New York in the wedding of Miss Gertrude Schirmer and Mr. William Rodman Fay, which is to take place on Tuesday, June 6, at the Church of the Ascension in New York. Miss Schirmer is the daughter of Mrs Gustave Schirmer (Grace Tilton) of East Thirty-fifth street.

Mr Fay is a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Story Fay (Rebecca Rodman Rotley) of Commonwealth avenue, and there is a large and prominent family connection. A brother is Mr. Samuel Prescott Fay, whose wedding to Miss Miriam Fiske is to take place in Paris this month. The young men formerly made their home together at Brimmer Chambers, but since Mr. S. P. Fay's departure for Europe some two months ago, Mr. W. R. Fay has made his headquarters at the Harvard Club. He has a country home in Medfield, and he and his bride will make it the all the year-around home.

Mr. Fay is giving his farewell bachelor dinner at the Norfolk Hunt Club on Saturday night, May 27. The oldest brother is Mr. Joseph S. Fay of Mount Vernon street, and the three are all members of the Somerset, Tennis and Racquet, Harvard and Norfolk Hunt clubs.

Miss Rosamond Adie.

CARDS OUT FOR PROMINENT WEDDING.

MRS. ROGER WOLCOTT'S cards went out last week for the marriage of her niece, Miss Edith Prescott Timmins, and Joseph Alvah Locke, Jr., on Saturday, June 3, at "Hill Farm," Readville. The ceremony at 3:30 will be witnessed by the relatives and a few of the more intimate friends. A large reception will follow at 4 o'clock. Mr. Locke, whose home is in Portland, Me., graduated from Harvard in '09 and from the Law School three years later.

Miss Timmins is the daughter of Mrs. Prescott Timmins, formerly of Groton, whose present home is in Colorado Springs. The young girl has spent much time with her aunt, Mrs Wolcott, who presented her three years ago last December at a dinner dance at the Copley Plaza. Among her sister debutantes are Miss Josephine Rantoul, whose wedding to Mr. Murray is set for Decoration Day, and Miss Alice Wesselhoeft and Miss Miriam Mason, two of the prospective June brides, their fiances, Mr Leverett Saltonstall and Mr. Franklin Trumbull, respectively.

BOSTON MAN TAKES NEW YORK BRIDE

THE marriage of Miss Margaret Carpenter and Dr. Henry Barber Richardson took place very quietly on Tuesday at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. George Rice Carpenter (Mary Seymour), on West One Hundred and Twelfth street in New York. The guests were confined entirely to the relatives. The bride's late father was Professor George R. Carpenter, who graduated from Harvard in '76.

Dr. Richardson is the third son of Mrs. Maurice H. Richardson of Beacon street and the late Dr. Richardson. He graduated from Harvard in 1910 and from the Medical school three years later, and is now connected with the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. The brothers are Dr. Edward P. Richardson, Harvard '02; Mr. Maurice H. Richardson, '09, and Mr. Wyman Richardson, a junior at the university. The sister is Mrs. Robert Walcott of Brattle street, Cambridge and Mrs. Gracie Hall Roosevelt, formerly of Cambridge and now of Schnectady. Dr and Mrs. Robinson, upon their return from their honeymoon, will be for a time with the former's mother at the Beacon street home.

ABOUT COTTAGERS AT COHASSET.

MRS HENRY D. HYDE of Commonwealth avenue, with her family, and Miss Mary Sears, who was at the Abbotsford after her stay in Florida, are among the first of the Cohasset colony to open their Summer homes on the Jerusalem road.

Mr and Mrs. Herbert Lyman and their two daughters are staying on at the Charles H Amory place in Milton, where they are spending her second season, until the first of June before opening their Cohasset cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Lincoln of Brookline are to be at Cohasset after an interim of two or three years, when their cottage was occupied by their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs James Bean, who this season are to have the Townsend place at the Cove.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Thebaud (Gertrude Lee McCard McCurdy) of Morristown, N. J., and Mr Frederick P. Fish of Prescott street, Longwood are added to the list of newcomers on the Jerusalem road. Mr. Thebaud has taken the estate of the late Mr. and Mrs. William D. Mandell, and Mr. Fish the Littleton cottage.

The $20,000 house which is being built at White Head for Mr. and Mrs. Albert F. Bigelow will not be ready for occupancy before July.

The new home of Mr. and Mrs. William Bowditch Long (Harriet Bayley) of West Cedar street, near that of Mr. and Mrs Edward B Bayley on Beach street, is about completed and the young people are planning to take possession next month. The wedding was in Cohasset last June.

ABOUT SOCIETY HERE AND THERE

THE E. Prescott Rowes of Longwood are to make their permanent Summer home in Magnolia. Mr. Rowe has just bought the Haughton cottage on Norman avenue, and the family will move down next week Saturday.

Mrs. Joseph Coleman, whose son, Mr. Loring Coleman, recently became engaged to Miss Christine Snelling, is president of the exclusive Casino Club in Chicago. She gave a large [illegible] recently, when scenes of the Casino Players' movies were taken at the clubhouse to figure in the elaborate society movie film to be given in aid of the Red Cross work in America.

Mrs. Gordon Prince is among those remaining in town until after the Country Club races, as her son, Mr. Gordon Prince has entered his horses. Mrs Prince has been indefatigable in her Red Cross work, which she hopes to continue through the Summer at the North Shore.

Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer has rented one of her two villas on Bellevue avenue in Newport to Mrs. Dulany Howard, who is planning to open it next month.

Household Suggestions--Care of the Baby--Cooking Recipes

Mothers Warned to Look After Teeth of Their Babies

By FREDERICK A. KEYES, D. M. D.
Boston Authority on Institutional Dentistry

THE cutting of baby teeth, commonly called teething, is a source of great anxiety to the parents and of great pain to the child. This pain cannot be entirely avoided; but it can be relieved in a great many cases by massaging the gums and by the liberal use of mouth washes. I should most earnestly suggest that the mouth of the infant be washed regularly with some mild antiseptic mouth wash from the very first day of his appearance on earth.

If these precautions are observed, the child should have little trouble in cutting his first teeth. It used to be the fashion to blame all diseases of obscure origin on the teething period, which in part is justified, for it has been found that those children who had an easy time cutting these first teeth are free from these diseases. If then, by chance, one of mouth washes, and in urgent cases a visit to the dentist, we can eliminate the excessive pain during the teething period, we can prevent [illegible] diseases.

The period of eruption of these baby teeth extends from the ninth month and seventeen months to the second year. By the end of the second year the child has all of the temporary teeth in number. The health of the mouth should be watched [illegible] and [illegible] signs of trouble should be a warning to parent and the child [illegible] the latter should attend to a dentist.

Of those children between the ages of three and five were taken to the dentist the greatest loss of their teeth. The most disastrous cause [illegible] their extensive decay between the sixth and twelfth years was the [illegible] rarity.

The importance of these temporary teeth cannot be overestimated. They are the source of many of the infectious diseases of childhood unless they are kept in a sound healthy condition. Their neglect is also the cause of irregular permanent teeth later on. In over 75 per cent of the cases of irregular teeth the cause is directly traceable to the premature loss of the baby teeth. Of the cases of irregularity which have come under my personal observation, more than one-half are due to the neglect and loss of these temporary teeth than to adenoids, thumbsucking and all the other bad habits of childhood put together.

Statistics compiled from examination of mouths of thousands of school children between six and fourteen show that over 95 per cent. of these baby teeth are badly decayed, with gums in a swollen, painful condition. Nature intended that these teeth should remain whole and healthy until they are forced out by the permanent teeth. But this happens in only 5 per cent. of the cases. Ninety-five children out of every 100 lose their baby teeth before nature intended they should. This condition should not be allowed to persist, when it is within our power to prevent it.

The first permanent tooth erupts behind the temporary molar teeth and many times is mistaken for one of them. Watch this tooth! It is the [illegible] of the arch of the [illegible] most important [illegible] teeth [illegible] is no one adult in one hundred who possesses all four of these six-year molar teeth.

From the sixth to the fourteenth year the permanent teeth are forcing out the temporary or baby teeth and erupting into place. Nature is shedding the temporary teeth and making room for the permanent adult set. It is during this period that most of the so-called diseases of childhood are contracted.

With 95 per cent of the children's mouths in a dirty, neglected condition, with several teeth in each of these mouths acting as ideal incubators for the growth of disease germs, is it any wonder that measles, whooping cough or the more serious diphtheria, scarlet fever can have been a necessary exposure of almost every child? Yet it is only lately that the mouth was seriously considered a possible source of infection.

Most diseases from puberty throughout life [illegible] the original [illegible] conditions. The teeth [illegible] the source of an infectious arthritis commonly called rheumatism? This has been proven by the fact that after the extraction of abscessed teeth the rheumatism has disappeared, although it failed to respond to any other treatment before the teeth were extracted.

Chronic dyspepsia, caused by faulty manipulation of food, gastric ulcer, cancer of the tongue, often caused by rough, jagged teeth, appendicitis, septicemia, acute endocarditis, due to the absorption of pus from abscessed teeth or pyorrhea, diseased condition of the gums, all these stem only a few of the diseases of adult life traceable to the mouth. Local diseases of the nose, throat, ears are often indirectly caused by decayed teeth.

Lately astigmatism of the eye has been proven to bear a very important relation to the condition of the teeth. In fact, you can see that the care of the teeth is important not only to the health of children, but their neglect is responsible, directly or indirectly, for the loss of adult life.

So far we have considered briefly the relation of the mouth to the physical condition of the individual. Let us now consider for a moment the psychological and mental diseases, insanity and drunkenness. In my recent examination of the patients in one of our State hospitals for the insane, I found only 2 per cent of the inmates with clean mouths. In an insane hospital eight cases of diagnosed insanity were completely cured after the extraction of impacted wisdom teeth. It was concluded from this that the constant pain from these teeth had acted reflexly on the nerve centers, producing symptoms of insanity, and when the cause was removed the symptoms disappeared.

Drunkards rarely have good teeth. Now one of the modern reasons for drunkenness is given as ill-nourishment, the victim being forced to use stimulants to take the place of proper food. But oftentimes, even with proper food, he is unable to masticate it properly and thereby loses much of its nourishing effects. The wife of the village drunkard often offers the blame for her husband's weakness because, forsooth, she was a scold, or a poor housekeeper, or a poor cook. May it not have been due in part to the fact that the man was unable to chew properly what his wife cooked, properly or improperly.

In both schools and prisons a set of good, healthy teeth is a rarity. More and more is written every day in the medical and dental papers to prove that decayed and consequently painful teeth are the starting point of many a criminal career.

One of the saddest cases of suicide in my experience was brought about by a young lawyer's desire to stop the pain in a tooth which he was afraid to have treated. I could enumerate many more instances of this kind, bearing out the truth of the direct or indirect results of painful teeth.

These statements are no mere flight of fancy; they are based wholly on scientific facts and research. If you accept them as true, why delay about removing the condition which causes the ill? Clean [illegible] of the use of two years, placed in the care of a dentist, I promise that over 50 per cent. of children's diseases could be eliminated. Doctors have known this for years, you know it now, and it behooves you to see that your husbands and brothers take the necessary steps to have compulsory dentistry in the public schools.

You mothers of children, take them at once to your family dentist for examination. See that they follow his instructions carefully; that they know how to use the toothbrush properly, and that they use it daily.

Rhubarb Season Has Arrived

This is a recipe for prunes and prune pie, useful now that the rhubarb season is here:

One cupful halved, stewed prunes; 1 cupful sugar, 2 teaspoonfuls flour, 2 tablespoonfuls cracker crumbs, ¼ teaspoonful salt pastry, 1½ cupfuls thinly sliced rhubarb.

Line a pie plate with pastry, dredge with flour, and cover bottom with ½ cupful of the sugar mixed with the flour. Put in the prunes and rhubarb, and sprinkle over them the crumbs, salt, and remaining sugar. Set on the upper crust and bake about thirty minutes in a moderate oven.

RHUBARB CONSERVE

One quart chopped red rhubarb, 1 pineapple, 1 orange, granulated sugar.

Combine the rhubarb, the pineapple shredded, and the orange-juice and rind grated. Weigh and add two-thirds the weight of sugar, let it stand for half an hour to start the juices, and boil gently till thick as jam. Seal in sterilized glasses.

Come-Ons

FRIENDLY chap the spider is. He says to Mr. Fly
"Just make yourself at home, old top, don't be the least bit shy.
My web is yours, amigo mine, just wander all about
And if there's anything you want you only need to shout.
I hope you'll never fail to see the 'Welcome on the mat.'
And, oh! The little fly was pleased to have a friend like that.

FRIENDLY chap Carranza is. He said to Uncle Sam
"I hope some day you'll realize how good a friend I am.
Just send your troops across the line and I will help them out,
And show your Mr. Wilson I'm a pretty good old scout;
Just trust in me and you will find I'm with you to the end."
And Mr. Wilson cried: "How fine to have so kind a friend."

BUT by and by the little fly discovered all too late,
That spiders aren't so friendly as their words would indicate.
And quite despite the kindly words that Brer Carranza said,
We grieve to find he's changed his mind and wants to fight instead.
This fable has a moral, which, we trust, holds no offence:
"THE FLY HAS NO MONOPOLY ON LACK OF COMMON SENSE."

"Too much brain work," says a physician, "causes the insteps to fall in." And too much footwork, we presume, causes the brain to collapse.

Speaking of a "pun-itive" expedition, the greatest horror we have heard of is the following from the Florida metropolis:
"Our soldiers seem to be almost Perishing in Mexico," remarked the Irish-American. "Dodd's ride," ejaculated the German-American.

REDUCING THE COST

Since Mr. Enricht's claim to have discovered a way to make water run an automobile at a cent a gallon, quite a number of other claims have been made.

EDITOR CITY LIFE SECTION:
Sir—I would like to sell my invention, which is destined to reduce the cost of living. By means of a few mystic words I invented I can change an ordinary brick into a three-pound slice of the best tenderloin steak you ever saw and the cost is only one-half cent per lb. I hope some millionaire will read this. I. THINKSO

Editor City Life Section:
I have an invention which beats the gasoline stunt nine ways. With certain paint I have discovered I can turn a jitney or a flivver into a swell 1917 model $5,000 car. Don't you think I ought to sell this some where? O. HILL.

Editor City Life Section:
Dear Sir—Do you think anyone would be interested in a simple little device which I have invented? It is a pocket mirror which, when spread with the magic liquid I have made, will enable you to look in and see just where you left your umbrella. It seems to me it ought to sell.
J. PLUVIUS, JR.

Editor City Life Section
Sir—Perhaps I may be accused of bragging, but I believe I have invented a rather handy thing. It consists of a hollow cylinder lined with a secret preparation. By running an ordinary pocket handkerchief through it the handkerchief is instantly changed into the newest style dress, worth $55. I thought perhaps some husbands might appreciate this. By changing the preparation you can make suits of clothes, opera cloaks or anything come out of the tube. Of course it is rather expensive. A variety of material for these secret preparations sufficient for a man and a woman's complete wardrobe will cost about 2½ cents
BO O'BRUMMEL.

Editor City Life Section:
With only a saw, hammer, five cents' worth of nails and glue and my secret patterns you can dissect a baby grand piano and from the material make a splendid umbrella stand or a foot stool. This ought to sell.
M. E. KANNIC.

Editor City Life Section
I have invented a simple little thing which I call a "Thisistheliffe." You simply apply the paste to the palm of your hand and hold it toward a bank or any place where there is money and—zippo, presto!—a thou sand dollars is drawn into your hands invisibly, through brick walls, steel safes or anything. It seems this ought to be a boon to a number of people. I GOTTUM

Editor City Life Section
This man Enricht is a piker. I have a colorless liquid which I brew from ordinary green grass. It costs about a cent a hundred gallons. By adding two drops of water you instantly change the water into the finest old vintage of champagne there is; champagne worth at least $9.75 a bot tle. There ought to be a demand for this somewhere
IMA DREEMIN

Sir—"Tenderoid" is destined to be a great success. It is a chemical I invented while experimenting to find out what sort of dyes are used in a rainbow. This chemical, made from ordinary sawdust, can be carried in the vest pocket. When dining, and the beef is tough, sprinkle a bit of this powder on it and it becomes as tender as a newly laid egg. It will make the butt ends of asparagus as tender as the tips. It will make a hard-boiled egg soft, it will remove the strings from string beans. A little in your wife's coffee will make her hard and cruel words as tender as honey. It costs about four cents a bushel, but you need not carry a bushel about with you. I would like to sell this invention or exchange it for the price of a roast of beef to practice on. A. BLANK

Editor City Life Section:
Dear Sir—Every commuter ought to be interested in a little chemical I have discovered. It is a green chemical and sweet, but I added coloring to make it green and sugar to make it sweet so as to disguise it. Sprinkle a few drops on the railroad track at your station and it will make your train on time, or, if you have just missed the train, sprinkle some on the tracks and the train will back up and get you. LAUK O'WENNA.

Editor City Life Section
Sir—Are you interested in inventions? I've worked night and day for three hours perfecting an inexpensive self-starter for automobiles. It is an imitation chestnut burr made of walnut shells and ordinary pins. The secret is how to stick the pins through the shells. By placing one of these burrs under the driving-shaft and bearing down on it, the car will start at once. MAXSON EDSIM

Unpopular Songs

By William F. Kirk

"Why Don't You Go to Mexico."

THE lights were shining brightly on a well-known Back Bay street;
A man was talking to his wife in words not very sweet.
He said he was sorry he had married her at all;
She said that she was sorrier, and louder grew the scuall.
A window in another flat was raised up all the way,
And unto that devoted pair a piercing voice did say:

(REFRAIN.)
"Why don't you go to Mexico
And have your battle there?
In every flat they'll pass the hat
And gladly pay your fare.
The neighbors do not care to know
About the life you've led.
Why don't you go to Mexico
So we can go to bed?

II

That couple heard them piercing words that came out of the dark,
While others shouted, "Hire a hall!" or, "Go hire Franklin Park!"
The truth did dawn upon them that in this great city now
One can't have any privacy when anxious for a row
That couple started laughing, and they made up right away.
To please their kindly neighbors for the words which they did say.

(REFRAIN.)
"Why don't you go to Mexico?" etc.

George M. Cohan, Out of a Job, Works as Artist's Model for Harrison Fisher

By WILLARD CONNELY

New York, May 6, 1916.

WHEN I chased into Harrison Fisher's studio, as far back as Monday afternoon, it was with the hope and belief that I would find in it, two or three of those winsome lassies whose portraits have made magazines of this generation do the hot cake specialty. Try as I will, I simply can't make myself hate the women like they hate me.

But instead of these happy-home destroying girls, what did I find there? Nothing but George M. Cohan. Georgie with a green necktie and a green fedora hat, sitting up serenely, while Harry sketched his visage, and actually thinking he was worth fifty cents an hour like any regular model.

Every day Cohan gets more versatile.

I asked Mr. Fisher if he was doing some Fourth of July magazine story with a Cohanesque hero, but he merely muttered something about Friars. Then it dawned upon me that the big Frolic was soon to be held in New York, Boston and a few other of our best known cities, and here was the cover for the souvenir program in the works. It will have a chocolate ice-cream color background, with a white border, and a profile of the dynamic George looking off to the right toward the box office. Below the portrait, in bold Gothic, or possibly in letters more subdued, will read the legend "Abbot GEORGE M. COHAN," and in a more obscure corner will appear the signature of Harrison Fisher, with its well-remembered box legged H and corkscrew F.

Far from being rigid and uncomfortable, while posing, George was unloading a story about Jim Thornton. It seems that Jim was getting ready to put on a new monologue, and he was desirous of stealing away to some quiet spot to write some stuff. He was completely surrounded by hotels, most of which were quiet in spots, and he figured that a remote room in one of these places—a good five-dollar room—ought to meet the requirements.

But Jim was sans rhino (broke) and at the moment found himself unable to effect his design. He approached an acquaintance and boned him for five, giving a full explanation of what he wanted the money for.

"You never had a five dollar room in your life," protested the victim. "Jim, you're lucky if you slide into as much as a two-dollar room. Besides," he eyed the comedian keenly, knowing Jim's passion for mineral water, "you don't want to blow five on a room. I know what you want it for."

Reassuring his sincerity and his honest intentions to write, Jim at length prevailed on the man to hand over a two-spot.

Half an hour later this man ran across Jim in the bar, very busy. He approached him gravely. "Jim," he said, with a pitying pat on the back, "I knew you didn't want that money for a room. Now, why"—

Sure, I got a room," Jim broke in, "a mean, dingy two-dollar room. I intended to write, but just as I sat down along came the Muse, stuck her head in the door, and when she saw what a rotten room it was she wouldn't come in.

Right here Harrison said he thought we better all rest a minute, so the four of us got up and stretched. I stretched because I had been posing, too—posing as an author. The fourth party was an individual whose name (Steve) described him well. Steve knows every actor from Shakespeare's time down to date, and he has some pretty good ideas on what the actor will be a hundred years from now. His scope is large. He should take exercises in reducing. A fifth man, a mere reporter, sat in for a few minutes, feverishly taking notes and drawing a picture of Harrison drawing George. With his little notebook, a well-dissected newspaper jammed in his pocket and a funny hat he looked hopelessly addicted to last-edition work. He didn't count, though some day he may be questioned by the census man.

"I don't like a man who turns up his hat in front," observed George. "That's what comes of eating with your hat on."

Then I told a story which was new to me, though when I finished Fisher yelled "Stone Age!" so I'll never believe Walter Hale again, who the day before swore he had "just cooked it up the night before." Anyhow, I think it's pretty good, so I'll just summarize it in passing. Cohan grunted at it, and that's something.

A man had a $250 horse, which he sold for $57.50, because the horse had the fatal habit of sitting on eggs. The purchaser laughed at this and thought he was buying a great bargain. He drove the horse away and they started to ford a small river. In mid-stream the horse sat down and refused to budge. The new owner, indignant, jumped out into the water, and walked three miles back to the man who had sold the animal to him.

"So he sat down in the river, did he?" said the first man when he had been apprised of the situation. "Oh, yes, there was one other little peculiarity about that horse I forgot to tell you. He sits on fish, too."

That may be old, as Fisher says, but I'll bet Jim Morton could tell it every day as long as he lives and bring down the house.

Well, we fooled around the studio for an hour or so, looking at a lot of Fisher's pictures and wishing they were alive and examining a lot of curious junk—Dickens might have named the place another Old Curiosity Shop—which the good Harrison had stuck here and there in odd corners. He had a couple of old bronze helmets, which he said were imitations he picked up in Harlem, but which I preferred to assume were worn by Xerxes and Alexander the Great. Fisher, the iconoclast, should be a little instead of chattering people's illusions in that rough way. And there were silken crazy-quilts, all right for any one to sleep under provided he wanted to induce nightmare, George said.

Fisher told about girls writing in to him and wanting to pose, and then let it out that he and Gibson and Christy had a close corporation on this model proposition: all romantic girls please memorize), and that it was impossible for any girl to break in unless she could qualify with the triumvirate.

Here George arose and stepped to the easel, and looked at himself critically, as he widened that angle on his famous lower lip and shoved his hands into his hip-pockets. "Say, Steve," he said, "if I was as good lookin' as that I'd go back on the stage!"

And buy a couple mull bags to hang in the dressing-room to put the mash notes in, huh?" I said, thinking it was a fairly good line. But George didn't think so much of it, for he gave me rather a sad glance.

"It's hard to work with a lot of people around," ventured Fisher. "I'm not used to it. I like to be sociable, you know, but when everybody talks—well, you know?" George nodded. I fidgeted.

And I thought I better be going.

ULTIMATUMS

Now that every one is talking about ultimatums it may serve as an education in diplomacy and at the same time make clear just what an ultimatum is, by quoting a few of the more celebrated.

Letters of Self-Made Men

The Would-be Victim to the Black Hander

MY DEAR SIR—Your kind letter, in which you suggest the [illegible] sum under a stone near the town pump or be shot dead to the pain of being blown to the Happy Land in the middle of the night by a dynamite bomb, was received.

I thank you very much for singling me out among a number of men who are much better prepared to leave this world in the middle of the night than I am, and I greatly appreciate the honor, but to tell you the truth about the matter, I can't see my way clear to make the trifling deposit you suggest. Somehow I don't feel as if it would be the right thing to do.

I know a man who put $1,500 under a boulder that was once and he never realized a cent on the investment. He was killed the very next day by an explosion of five aces which somehow had gotten into his sleeve.

I don't want to appear dictatorial, but might I suggest that you tackle somebody who does not make a specialty of laying for dynamite with a shotgun. Since I had the appendicitis and the doctors mowed my tonsils supplement, I can't see a joke like I used to, and I do a great deal of shooting on nights shooting at cats and the like, and I might be induced to pick off a plump d namiter.

If you attempt to dynamite my house [illegible] you had best come disguised as one of the Ten Commandments or I [illegible] disposed to make a horseradish grater out of your anatomy and present [illegible] to the hogs.

Yours respectfully, YOUR VICTIM—NOT.

Memorable Dinner.

"TALKING about good dinners," said a Boston shoe traveler, slowly, "I remember one I had in Bangor. I went into a slap up restaurant with some chums and ordered the finest thing in dinners. Then, when the bill came 'round, we couldn't decide who was to pay. They all wanted to, and so did I.

Very awkward for you all," agreed one of his listeners, skeptically.

Wal, yes," continued the man from Boston; "as we couldn't settle the matter, I proposed that we should blindfold the waiter, and then whichever one he caught was to be allowed to foot the bill.

A very good idea," said another listener, stifling a yawn. Whom did he catch?

I dunno," replied the Yankee, briefly; "but he ain't caught me yet."

Together at Last.

"WHAT'S up, Bill? You look scared."

"Should think so. Been a big explosion at our house.

Mine, too."

A WOMAN from the city was spending the Summer in Hingham, and one day, while doing her marketing, she asked the butcher how he happened to choose his business.

Gossip by the Sporting Oracle

SOUTHPAW—My contract this year calls for only $2,000. Is there any way I kin force the club to pay me what I am worth?

Sure thing, old timer. Judging from the stuff you have shown on the Spring junket, we feel sure the boss of your club would not only be willing but glad to destroy the old contract and enter into a new one giving you what you are worth. But why do that? If you don't feel like keeping the money, just hold out what you are worth and send the remaining $1,999.70 to us for our conscience fund.

AMATEUR ANGLER—[illegible] pretty soon. What kind of [illegible] there?

Oh, yes, you can get bait there, but Jersey lightning may not agree with you. Personally we prefer Scotch, but that is a matter of taste, and you may prefer rye or bourbon. Don't forget upon your arrival to arrange with a local fish dealer to [illegible] augments of trout to your family and friends during your stay. Many amateur anglers overlook this important feature of a fishing trip and return home covered with disgrace. It is well to provide yourself with copies of the sporting magazines, from which you can gain the material for the tall stories you will want to tell upon your return. In this connection, dont exaggerate. Remember that the biggest trout ever caught was only seven feet in length, and the largest that ever got away was ten feet.

Tony being Italian and Franz being Austrian, there were some points upon which they disagreed, such as the comparative merits of the King of Italy and the Emperor of Austria. They also differed as to the general intelligence, bravery and desirability of Austrians and Italians.

Tony decided he would not finish shaving Franz. Franz threatened to throw the barber chair through the mirror. Tony grabbed a razor and Franz grabbed a quart bottle of hair restorer. Just then Officer Phelps happened in. He stopped the fight before the fighting started, and then he told them they both ought to be ashamed of themselves.

"Why don't you go back to Italy and fight for your beloved King" asked Officer Phelps of Tony.

"Why don't you go back to Austria and fight for your dear old Emperor?" he demanded of Franz.

This made them look at [illegible] Tony went over in a corner and talked. Finally they shook hands.

"That's the stuff," exclaimed Officer Phelps. "I'm proud of you. I see you are a couple of heroes. You have shaken hands on it. It is useless to fight here. Now you will both go back and join your armie and then fight where you can each be of service to your country."

"Not a go back," grinned Tony.

"Here is we do remain," added Franz.

"How is that?" asked Officer Phelps in surprise.

"We have a pared," explained Tony.

BOSTON THEATRE

Anna Pavlowa, the incomparable Russian dancer and pantomimist, will be seen for the first time in Boston at the Boston Theatre this week in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," surrounded by a strong bill of pictures and high-class concert vaudeville attractions. "The Dumb Girl of Portici" is a wonderfully thrilling and beautiful story of Italy and the Bay of Naples in the early seventeenth century, under the reign of the King of Spain. Pavlowa plays the title role, and she is supported by a cast of 3,000 players, including her entire ballet Russe. Interwoven with the story of love are the dances of the celebrated Pavlowa ballet. "The Dumb Girl of Portici" is adapted from Auber's famous opera, "Massaniello." The concert vaudeville attractions surrounding it include three vagrants, in a high-class musical offering; Reiter Brothers, novelty acrobatic clowns; Hartmann and Varady, held over for a second week, with all new dances, and the big company of thirty singers and dancers that have made concert vaudeville at the Boston Theatre town talk.

PARK THEATRE

Geraldine Farrar, Boston's own opera star, is seen this week at the Park Theatre in the Paramount production, Maria Rosa." In this play Miss Farrar reaches new heights in [illegible] as a Spanish peasant maid in the title part of Maria Rosa, who is simple of manner, and is plunged into the midst of tragedy by reason of the jealousy of an unworthy suitor. Among those who appear with Miss Farrar in "Maria Rosa" are Wallace Reid, Pedro de Corbodo and Anita Kelg.

Another production is "The Blindness of Love," a Mutro in five acts, featuring Julius Steger.

The program is complete with pictures of current events of Boston and vicinity, and Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew in "The Model Cook." Mr. Alessandro Liberati in new selections from operas.

MODERN THEATRE

Theda Bara, the famous exactor of wicked feminine roles in the films, is presented by William Fox at the Modern Theatre the entire coming week in "The Eternal Sapho." It is the tale of a Sapho of modern life, the story concerning a young woman of the under-half of the world, who is rescued from the fury of a drunken father by a group of art students who were out on a lark. Taken by them to their studio, lots are drawn, and she becomes the model for one of them. Step by step she finds herself, and the worse side of her feminine nature, perverted as it is, reveals itself in the adventures in which she is embroiled. A married man falls in love with her and she with him, though she is not aware that he is not a bachelor. Upon being informed she goes to his home intending to expose him, but there she meets his child, and she departs without accomplishing her purpose. From then the climax rises that culminates in the wrecking of three men's lives, the result of her wanton wickedness. On the same bill and to run for the entire week Paramount Pictures offer "The Innocent Lie." It tells the story of a young Irish girl who comes to America to search for her brother.

FENWAY THEATRE

Everyone who has seen Marguerite Clarke in "Wild Flower," "Miss and Men" and other Famous Players-Paramount pictures in which she has played the mischievous little girl, will hail with delight the news that she may be seen at the Fenway next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in an elaborate film adaptation of the popular story, "Molly Make-Believe."

The Paramount feature at the Fenway the last three days of the week shows John Barrymore in "The Red Widow."

"Gloria's Romance" will be shown in several instalments and will feature Miss Billie Burke, beginning May 15.

COPLEY THEATRE

Beginning tomorrow, Monday, afternoon, the Copley Theatre on Dartmouth street will offer a daily afternoon and evening program of photoplays and entertainment features, presenting as the principal attraction of the opening week Mary Miles Minter in "The Fairy and the Waif." With Miss Minter, known everywhere as "The Littlest Rebel," will appear Percy Helton of "Peter Grimm" fame, and Will Archie and some ninety-four characters in this most gripping story by Mrs. Marie Hubert Frohman, arranged by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Performances will be given daily at 2, 3 and 8 p.m., with Sunday evening performances at 8 o'clock. Owing to the unusual demand for seats for previous bookings, however, the regular performances will be omitted on Wednesday and Thursday evenings of the opening week. The musical program will include selections by Miss Dorothy Fairbanks, soprano, and Miss Mae Conklin, violinist.

OLD SOUTH THEATRE

Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgeley, Lasky stars, will be featured in the Paramount program Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Old South Theatre. "The Love Mask," in which they will be seen, is a Western drama in which Miss Ridgeley has the part of a young girl trying to eke out her existence panning gold in the days of '49. Disguised as "silver Slim," a notorious bandit, she is seen in an entirely different role from any in which she has appeared.

On Thursday Marguerite Clarke will be seen in "Molly Make-Believe."

EXETER STREET THEATRE

The leading attraction this evening will be Irene Fenwick in "The Sentimental Lady." Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday William B. Hart will be shown in "The Disciple." Constance Collier will also appear in "Tongues of Men."

For the last half of the week Ethel Barrymore takes the leading part in an interesting drama of Russian intrigue, "The Kiss of Hate," and John Barrymore in a first-class gaiety comedy, "The Dictator." Burton Holmes travel pictures, Sidney Drew comedies and Bray cartoons will be shown during the week.

TREMONT TEMPLE

A pretentious photo-play that not only embodies in its presentation a tensely dramatic plot and a most capable artistic interpretation but also deals effectively with one of society's biggest problems is certain to be greeted with acclaim by lovers of the unique and unusual in film entertainment.

Such a production is "The Invisible Enemy," a five-part feature that comes to the Tremont Temple for a special engagement during the week of Monday, May 8.

Well played, superbly photographed, combining complete knowledge of conditions with faultless direction, "The Invisible Enemy" drives home a vital lesson and affords a unique and thoroughly enjoyable entertainment.

In addition to "The Invisible Enemy" the management has made arrangements for the presentation of additional features which will include the famous Paramount Travel Pictures, Burton Holmes' "Cliff Dwellers of North America," and a Paramount-Bray cartoon.

FRANKLIN PARK THEATRE

Pierre N. Read man in the great Metro production, "Man and His Soul," will be the star attraction at the Franklin Park for a evening. The big show for Monday is headed by Olga Petrova in "What Will People Say?" pronounced by some of the best efforts of this famous star. There will be an entire change of program on Tuesday.

'Ramona' True to History It Portrays

A WEALTH of material for dramatic effects was provided by Helen Hunt Jackson's romance [illegible] a film version of which will be presented at the Colonial Theatre beginning Tuesday evening, May 16.

It is a pathetically beautiful love story laid in scenes of the most romantic past in the history of this continent. The familiar and beloved people of Mrs. Jackson's pages lived in a previous generation, but so flaming with the universal passions is the story that its incidents are lived on the screen with all the graphic power and "zeip" of incidents of this day.

"Ramona" is the story of California, of the fierce gravity of the native dons and the fiercer rapacity of the on-rushing white homesteaders. It is a story that carries a sermon, but the author made of it something greater and grander than propaganda, for she put into it the living truth and vital romance so richly that it captured the imagination of the entire continent.

Mrs. Jackson wrote avowedly to awaken the American masses, and through them the lawmakers, to a practical sympathy with the Indian, but she never dared to dream of the success which crowned her efforts after her death, which came so soon following the publication of her story.

This photoplay will be a test of the capacity of the camera, not only to record beautiful scenes of California, portrayals of characters of an absorbing interest and romances with few peers in the entire realm of literature but the genius of a new empire for such California was at the mind of the story.

Al Shean Forced to Disguise Hunger

Al Shean, who plays the role of Anthony Schmalz in the Blossom-Herbert comic opera, "Princess Pat," which is playing an engagement at the Park Square Theatre, was engaged for the part before Henry Blossom had finished a libretto. One day last July, while hurrying down Broadway with intent to eat, Shean was hailed by Mr. Blossom and Fred G. Latham, the stage director of the opera.

"You're just the man we're looking for," said Blossom. "I want to read you a part for you."

It was 2 p. m. and Shean was hungry, very hungry. He knew it would take half the afternoon to discuss the role and he felt it was up to him to say: "Delighted, let's go for lunch."

"We're all set, Al," said Blossom, when they were seated in a cafe, "hurry your order."

"What, me?" replied Shean with fine pretence of no appetite. "Oh, no, not me. I couldn't touch a thing. You see I ate a very late and hearty breakfast." Two hours later the waiter fled Blossom and Latham went gaily down the street, while Shean, tightly clutching all that was left of his three dollars—a dime—made a dash for the nearest quick lunch and ordered beans.

Harvard 'Cercle Francais' to Present Two Plays

A scene from "Servir," Henri Lavedan's play, to be given by Harvard Club. Left to right, Hardinge Scholte as Colonel Eulin; Doris Halman as Mme. Eulin, and Robert Longyear as Lieutenant Eulin.

The "Cercle Francais de l'Universite Harvard," one of the social and dramatic clubs of the college, has announced a Spring dramatic production to be given at [illegible] Theatre on Thursday evening. The plays selected are "Servir," a two-act play by Henri Lavedan, the contemporary French dramatist [illegible] a farce by Eugene Labiche.

"Servir" is to be given by special arrangement with the author, only one of whose plays, "Le Duel," acted by the Students was previously [illegible] produced in this country.

Just as Brieux took up the question of marriage and purity in "Damaged Goods," so Lavedan faced the problem of imperialism and militarism in "Servir."

It was written during the trouble between France and Morocco and produced at the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt [illegible]. Guitry took the leading role of the typical army officer of the old school, who, as the title to the play suggests, makes service to the aggrandizement of the State the entire and all-absorbing purpose of life, who has already offered up two sons in service to her and who now finds his last son questioning the whole ideal and purpose of his father's existence.

The situation is worked out to a conclusion in two scenes, the first in the home of the old colonel, the second in an explosive factory at Vincennes. When first produced, it was recognized by critics and others in touch with the actual situation as a remarkable analysis of the conditions and conflicting points of view which, scarcely more than a year later, were to come to a head in the present war.

The play immediately stirred up a general discussion not unlike that which attended upon the recent production of "Justice" in Boston and elsewhere. Even army officers of high rank were moved by the [illegible] to give utterance to [illegible] ions on the topic.

The bill will be rounded out by a farce cut more on the pattern of the [illegible] ally given out by the [illegible] anizations. It includes a young gentleman of means, the young gentleman's duty assigned fiancee, a charming femme de chambre, to complicate the plot and a rich money specially introduced to complicate it further.

At the conclusion of the performance a dance for the actors, members of the Cercle, their guests and the remainder of the audience will be held in the Copley Theatre ballroom.

Women's parts will be taken by members of the Radcliffe Cercle.

Miss Barrymore Likes New Part

When Frohman [illegible] Barrymore was [illegible] the role of the intellectual, [illegible] traveling salesman [illegible] Cheney, in the dramatization of Edna Ferber's popular [illegible] stories, numerous [illegible] noticed the opinion that the [illegible] Barrymore was too young of a girl for a woman to lose herself in the part of a hustling saleswoman.

Miss Barrymore, who comes to the Hollis Street Theatre in the new comedy entitled [illegible] Mrs. Cheney, should be somewhat of a misfit, for she is a gentlewoman of distinguished stage family, and the play in which for six months past she has been appearing at the Lexington Theatre in New York was [illegible] the self-sufficient saleswoman.

"The [illegible] idea to me," said Miss Barrymore, [illegible] other day, "being [illegible] for [illegible] to act a business [illegible] Arent business women getting [illegible] ladies' parts? [illegible] been working for [illegible] I started to grow up. I've been on the road longer than Emma McChesney. But I hope that hasn't anything to do with my being a lady! I've known countless buyers in my life, and they've never been anything but ladies."

Reaf Forest Fire Seen at Keith's

Drama has been drama since the beginning of time, but scenic illusions are a [illegible] modern gem of the theatre, and therefore in one instance at least the play is not the thing.

"The Forest Fire" at B. F. Keith's this week has to go with the wild rifle of an engine through such a conflagration. No fire is used in the illusion, but it is produced entirely by electrical and scenic effects and the illusion is carried out with such vividness that even the [illegible] can almost [illegible] heat of the flames.

On [illegible] engine is [illegible] engine itself is full-sized, and a complete working model, and when it is [illegible] volving, its pistons churning in the [illegible] and [illegible] and screaming with a laborious task that the engineer is imposing upon them. The funnel belches fire and smoke and every draft is made open to compel a forced draft. All around the real living mass of steel, trees from young shoots to giant oak are giving forth tongues of [illegible] creak, crackle and [illegible] last wild hope of [illegible] deafening crashes carrying everything before them. The under brush and grass is a blanket of fire [illegible] The effect generally is that of a raging furnace, and that apparently no human being can [illegible]

Langdon McCormick wrote and staged "The Forest Fire." The [illegible] was furnished by [illegible] Co., and attended to the production and Sylvia Bidwell is seen in the principal role [illegible]

PLAYS AND PLAYERS BILLED AT BOSTON PLAYHOUSES DURING THE WEEK

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE

Ethel Barrymore enters upon a fortnight's Boston engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre tomorrow evening in "Our Mrs. McChesney," a dramatization by George V. Hobart of Edna Ferber's popular "Most Beef Medium" stories. In preparing the [illegible] has made one of the most interesting and humorous [illegible] in the busy career of Emma McChesney, the charming and self-sufficient saleswoman of petticoats, gathering them into a coherent story, contained in three acts replete with human and humorous atmosphere.

The roles gives Miss Barrymore ample scope for the play of her splendid sense of humor and her whimsical, deft flashes of comedy. Mr. Hobart and Miss Ferber have chosen for the scenes of their play the locations most familiar to the thousands of readers of Emma McChesney and her adventures. The first act, depicting the hotel lobby at Sandusky, affords innumerable opportunities for the introduction of familiar and latch-provoking types.

The main office of the busy T. A. Buck Petticoat Company forms the setting of the second act, and here are shown the human bits of every-day business life, from the optimistic, though plump, girl stenographer, with her attendant group of admiring salesmen, to the haughty and beautiful models.

Miss Barrymore has been surrounded with a company of distinguished players especially chosen for their adaptability to the types they portray. Prominent roles are in the hands of William Ford, W. H. [illegible] Donald Gallagher, A. Romaine Callender, Thomas Reynolds, Hugh Dillman, James H. Morrison, Frank McCoy, Mildred Barrett, Anita Rothe, Gwendolyn Piers, Clarice Clarke, Louise Worthington, Dorothy Walters, Emma Salvatore and twenty others.

B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE

Langdon McCormick's sensation of two continents, "The Forest Fire," in five scenes with a company of thirty players, will be presented for the first time in Boston at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week, at the head of a strong vaudeville bill. "The Forest Fire" is a thrilling drama of the Canadian timberland, written about a wonderfully realistic and awe-inspiring reproduction [illegible] produced in London, "The Forest Fire" ran for two years at the Palladium.

A real, full-sized engine is shown on the stage, rushing through the blazing forest, while huge pine trees, thirty feet high, fall crashing to the ground. There are several tableaux, including the signal lights on the mountains and the smouldering forest by moonlight. Sylvia Bidwell plays the young telephone operator, Jane Hadley, and she is supported by a splendid cast. Surrounding "The Forest Fire," is a bill including "The Man Off the Ice Wagon," a phenomenal tenor; Kate Elinore and Kim Williams, in "The Hunter and the Huntress;" Dottie King and her Ballet Divertissement from the Metropolitan Opera House, The Gaudamidis Spanish clowns with trained poodles; Chic Williams & Co., in "Who Was Blame"; Warren and Templeton, two loose pages from the book of fun; Marguerite Farrell, in songs, and Albert Cutler, the Yankee billiardist.

WILBUR THEATRE

The Wilbur Theatre will be closed the coming week to provide for the rehearsals and elaborate preparations for the new musical comedy production which will be made by the Shubert's on Monday evening, May 15. It is entitled "A Brazilian Honeymoon," and will serve to bring back to Boston Miss Marguerite Namara, so recently seen on the same stage in "Alone at Last." She is cast for the prima donna role. The cast contains the names of many well-known and much-liked artists, among them being Frances Demarest, whose name is familiar to musical comedy patrons. There is also Dolly Castles, as blonde and dainty as ever; Miss Marion Ballou, Raymond and Caverly, who have been drafted from vaudeville; L. A. Simons, who also comes from the two-a-day field; Hal Ford, remembered for his excellent work in "Adele," "Made in America" and "The Greatest Nation"; Clifton Webb, John Hyams, Dorothy, Shep Camp, Jeanne Cartier, Kathleen George, Kitty Collier, Nora White, Philip Dunning, William Scherff and others.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE

The first production of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" will be given at the Castle Square this week. This romantic play of life among the mountains of southwestern Virginia is a dramatization by Eugene Walter of the novel of the same name by John Fox, Jr., and it has proved itself popular wherever acted.

It is a simple story that is told in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and the picturesqueness of the stage settings and which it is placed adds to its entertaining qualities. It will be acted by the Craig players, and it will bring back to the Castle Square stage Miss Doris Olcson, after an absence of a year.

WALDRON'S CASINO

One of the biggest combinations of fun and real comedy in burlesque will be at Waldron's Casino, beginning with Monday's matinee. The show is headed by "Sliding Billy" Watson and E. Lee Wrothe. Both have been stars for years at the head of their own companies, and have always been big enough to carry their respective shows to a big success.

Watson is a clever comedy man, with a knowledge of stage business and stage fun won after many years of success in his line. He is using the very funny act in which he is shown in the patent office at Washington, and this sketch has been one of his big features in burlesque.

Ed Lee Wrothe is the famous "Janitor Higgins." There is no better liked character in the burlesque world than the impudent janitor, and Wrothe makes him a winner. Like Watson, Wrothe is reviving the big hit of his burlesque career, "Higgins at the Race Track" in the Spider." For the latter half of the week there will be a change in the supporting vaudeville numbers, including Joseph K. Watson in a monologue.

LOEW'S ST. JAMES THEATRE

There are two leading features on the bill at Loew's St. James Theatre the first half of the week. Hugh Norton [illegible] act comedy, "Officer 444". Grace Hazard will present a most attractive singing act, "Five Part of Comic Opera." The Gaiech sisters present an acrobatic act and Lawrence and Edwards present their military skit. Eschell Roberts will present an exclusive repertoire of songs. The first half of the week there will be shown the third instalment of "The Mysteries of Myra," this theatre having the first showing of each instalment.

GLOBE THEATRE

Chief on the bill at the Globe Theatre the entire coming week are the Six Water Lilies, who display their cleverness in diving. In addition there are Hendricks and Padula, ragtime singers and ace base pianists; Ernest Cortis in "A Bit of Life." The feature photo play for the first half of the week is Norma Talmadge in "The Children in the House."

NANTASKET STEAMERS

Frederic L. Lane, general manager of the Nantasket Beach Steamboat Company, is offering a Spring service of the steamers that has never been equaled. Cottage owners, instead of opening their Summer homes the first of June, are already enjoying these early months at the shore. They are able to reach town for business in the morning at a reasonable hour and leave in time to arrive at Hull for dinner.

The new restaurant on the steamer South Shore, which will run to Plymouth this Summer, is nearing completion and bids fair to be the greatest attraction for the tourist on the South Shore. Also a number of large, airy stateroms have been installed on the hurricane deck of this steamer.

The restaurant will be in charge of a well-known French chef and steward. The steamer Mary Chilton, which was launched recently, is also nearing completion and will be ready for the service around June 1.

BRAVES FIELD

Signor Alfeso D'A[illegible] whose unique musical organization, the Concerto Armonico, will make its debut [illegible] concert at Braves Field, Sunday, May 21, has arranged an attractive program of music for the occasion. Selections from several of the more popular operas have been [illegible] and altogether the program promises to be appealing to all lovers of music. The Concerto Armonico is a distinctly new organization and Signor D'Alfonso believes that its appearance will mark an innovation in music-art. It is composed of 125 skilled musicians and the program they will render under the signor's leadership will be supplemented by selections by prominent soloists.

Plays That Remain

COLONIAL THEATRE

"The Dawn" will start on its second and last week of its engagement at the Colonial Theatre tomorrow evening. This new play from the pen of George D. How to Make Your VACATION A GOOD INVESTMENT condition from which they are lured only by the sound of the food gong. For each of these there is a happy medium and they will profit wisely by following it.

C

Violent exercise or bathing, soon after a hearty meal is always dangerous. An interval of at least an hour should elapse in either case. Eating heartily, when exhausted by severe exercise, is also to be avoided if you would avoid indigestion.

If there is no doctor enjoying his Summer vacation near your camp, an emergency medical kit should be part of the camp equipment.

The following articles and remedies will be found practical:

Surgeons' plaster; absorbent cotton and surgeons' gauze; some good antiseptic ointment; three five-yard roller bandages; an alcohol stove and denatured alcohol to burn in it, a fountain syringe, hot-water bottle; thermos bottle; tincture of iodine; mustard; witch hazel; grain alcohol; spirits of camphor; peroxide of hydrogen or dioxogen; brandy; aromatic ammonia; compound tablets of rhubarb and soda; chemically pure glycerine; epsom salts; castor oil; spirits of turpentine; several cakes of good foot soap; powdered borax; some safe headache remedy, and digestive agent (both of which should be prescribed by a physician); pure aqua ammonia; a large jar of white vaseline; a good supply of soothing complexion lotions, and a large bundle of soft, clean cotton cloth and wool flannel.

Probably the best type of camps, at least from a hygienic and sanitary standpoint are military camps. Here, rigid rules governing living conditions are not only understood but they are part of the discipline and training of every soldier. If the average camper could inspect a modern military encampment, he would appreciate how perfectly the system of hygiene has been worked out. Military training would prove a valuable asset to any man who spends his vacations in the woods or on the shore.

Just What Makes SOME SMOKE BLUE

EVERY smoker, and every friend of a smoker has noticed that whereas the smoke that issues from the mouth or nostrils is whitish in color the mingling wreaths of smoke which rise from the end of a cigar or cigarette and from the bowl of a pipe are blue.

The explanation of this difference lies in the little-understood

a series of

ous experiment, by sending clouds of smoke from different burning through a pipe of a certain size and measuring their color by a sensitive colorimeter, found that as the particles increased in size, their bluish color disappeared. The color of the particles in the smoke, the whiter was the general effect.

Charcoal is almost perfectly consumed and send up no particles

Cigarettes are imperfectly consumed and therefore they send up a cloud of thick, white smoke.

In the case of the cigar, the slow, steady burning at the tip results in almost complete combustion, the of the dust attract moisture (this is the cause of rain), and when smoke enters the mouth, the particles of smoke attract moisture from the mouth and the nasal cavity. When the smoke is puffed out again, therefore, each microscopic particle of dust has, as it were, a liquid ring of moisture around it, and consequently when the light strikes the smoke it is reflected from the larger particles and appears white.

Daylight consists of scattered sunlight reflected from the particles of dust. If it were not for the dust there would be a dark background to the sky by night, the light of the sun would shine down without a ray being lost until it struck the earth, and instead of diffused daylight we should see only a dazzling ball in the sky and the reflection from the ground. The shorter light rays, which are and hence the sky appears blue. When, however, the air is full of moisture, as by fog, the sun appears yellow or red, or sometimes a dull red.

The differently colored smoke from cigar, cigarette or pipe therefore, serves as a means of explaining some of the most difficult problems of light.

How They Used to SAIL ON WHEELS

A "Sailing Chariot" That Is Said to Have Been Used in the Eighteenth Century. It Would Carry from 6 to 10 Persons and on One Occasion Is Said to Have Attained a Speed of 20 Miles An Hour.

IN a rare volume by John Wilkins, Bishop of Chester, published in the early part of the eighteenth century, we have an account of some curious sailing chariots, as he calls them, and even drawings of two different kinds.

The force of the wind in the motion of sails, he says, may be applied to the driving of a chariot upon a level ground as well as upon the water. The

He claims that such chariots were common on the plains of China, and that one was actually operated at Scheveling in Holland. This one was said to have been faster than any ship in existence, as to carry twenty or thirty miles in a few hours, the steersman alone working at the

The body of it being somewhat like a boat moving upon four wheels of equal bigness with two axles like those of a ship; there being some contrivance to steer and turn it by moving a rudder which is fixed on the two hindmost wheels; and for the stopping of it this must be done either by letting down the sails, or turning them from the wind."

I have often thought," writes the Bishop, "that it would be worth the experiment to inquire whether or no such a sailing chariot might not be more conveniently framed with movable sails, whose use might be impressed from their motion equivalent to those in a wind mill. Their foremost wheels, as in other chariots for the greater facility, would be some what lower than the other."

WOOLEN SHIRTS Are Often COOLEST

TOO many persons it has long been a mystery why the privates of the United States Marine Corps and Army are required to wear heavy woolen khaki shirts in the hottest days of in tropical climates, where the temperature hangs around ninety degrees the year around.

In spite of the apparent incongruity of such a practice, its value in preserving health and life has been many times proven, and the woolen shirt is now an indispensable article to the equipment of all well-regulated armies.

This shirt fulfils many functions in the first place, it absorbs all excessive moisture and perspiration, evaporating it into the air as rapidly as formed. A cotton or silk shirt, being a poor evaporator, soon collects so much moisture that it becomes wringing wet.

When there is sufficient perspiration to dampen the clothes, the body undergoes a reaction of temperature. With a cotton or silk shirt, there is danger of a severe chill. With the woolen khaki shirt on the contrary, sudden changes are impossible and the cooling process is gradual and natural.

For many years it has been the practice in some armies to require the men to wear wide bands of woolen cloth around the abdomen day and night to prevent chill and feverish conditions from attacking the intestines and causing dangerous diseases. This practise evolved into the khaki wool outer shirt.

Another great advantage of this new theory in clothing, especially in the tropics, is the protection afforded against the bites of disease-breeding mosquitoes and flies. Tropical malaria, yellow fever, elephantiasis, and many other dangerous diseases are transmitted by the mosquito. This insect is able to sting very freely through light cotton and silk garments, but, in the fleecy surface of the khaki shirt, his proboscis becomes hopelessly entangled and he is unable to do any harm.

Science Says You Should FEED YOUR WATCH EVERY MORNING

movement of the works depends

The time keeping value of a watch depends less upon its cost than upon the care that watch. If wound in the morning, position of it night it will keep good better time.

It is a fact that watches owned by women are less accurate than those carried by men. The cause for this can be directly assigned to the irregularity with which women wind their watches and the carelessness with which they allow them to run down.

When a watch is allowed to stop because it has not been wound it is equivalent to a man being compelled to stop work because that his ability to do steady work is gone. Starve a watch spring often enough and it is weakened so that its ability to do steady work is gone. A good watch should never be allowed to run down, nor should the mainspring ever be put on the spring of forcing it to work to the limit of its winding.

When a watch spring is tightly coiled in other words, when it has been recently wound, it is at its point of greatest power. The "kick" of a watch then is strong and the potency of the spring is more than enough to regulate the works. At the eighteenth hour, in an average timepiece, the spring has become sufficiently far uncoiled to weaken its strength so that its working powers are only a little above the work it has to do. From the twentieth to the twenty-second hour the point is reached when the power of the spring begins to be strained. For a couple of hours further the strength of the spring suffices, but after that a severe strain is put upon it.

The four hours or so that a watch will run beyond its true period of twenty-four hours is harder on the watch than a week of regular running, and because of the weakness of the spring it fails to keep good time.

A watch is placed under greater stress during the daytime, for, as a rule, it is carried in the pocket and therefore has to resist the strains of constant movements. Consequently the spring should be at its strongest during the daytime. At night there is less strain upon the watch, there-the time of the weakening of the spring should be at night. This will equalize the strain and help greatly in the time keeping qualities of the watch. Moreover, regularity is a matter of great importance and most of us vary less in our hours of rising than of going to bed.

The reason why wrist watches are notoriously bad timekeepers is that they are regulated in a watchmaker's establishment, where they are not subject to the jerks and changes of position they must endure on the wrist. They should be regulated while worn by visiting a jeweller's twice a week for two or three weeks and then they will continue correctly without either gaining or losing.

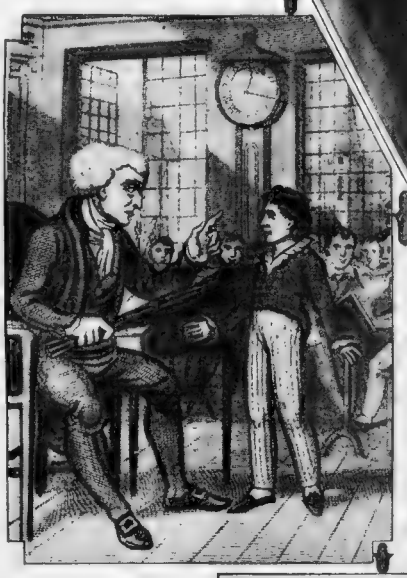
Impossible American Children

A Sound Spanking, the Duke of Manchester Recommends, as the One Thing Needful for Young America "The Wonder, Despair and Pest" of All European Observers

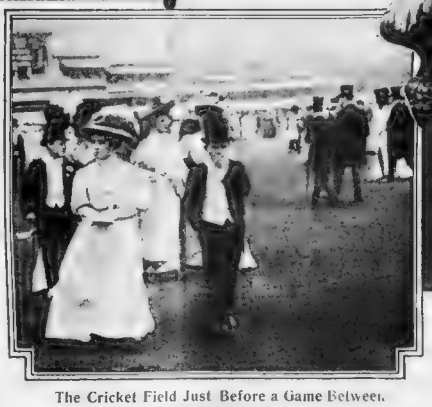
By His Grace the Duke of Manchester
Written Especially for this Newspaper

The Late J. Pierpont Morgan's Granddaughters.
This Curious Photograph of the Two Daughters of Mr. Herbert Satterlee Can Probably Not Be Matched by Any Photograph of Any Well-Bred Young English Girls.



The Old English Idea of Not Spoiling the Child by Sparing the Rod—from an Early English Wood Cut.

The Duke of Manchester and One of His Children.
Is This Youngster Being Brought Up as a Little English Gentleman or an American Hoodlum?



The Cricket Field Just Before a Game Between Eton and Harrow.
For Many Long Years the Famous English Schools of Eton and Harrow Have Been Looked Upon as the Nursery for Training the English Gentleman.

There are two excellent texts in the Bible which could be taught in America with excellent results. To parents should be taught "Spare the rod and spoil the child," and, if necessary, by carrying out this rule every child should be taught the Commandment "Honor thy father and thy mother." These two should be framed and hung each side of the "God Bless Our Home" in every parlor.

The American child is the wonder and despair of all Europeans, and an incomprehensible pest to Orientals. I am not for a moment suggesting that it is not of the first importance to allow a child as much healthy liberty as possible, or that it should not be encouraged to develop its individuality, but intelligent discipline is as necessary for the comfort of the child as for the comfort of its elders.

This world is a crowded place, and getting more crowded every day, and there is no room in it for any form of unbridled license. If there were room for each person to have the road to himself or herself there would be no necessity for traffic regulations.

The child of any nation is a long time to learn to consider to a greater or less extent the feelings of others and the difference between America and elsewhere is that they seem to start the teaching later.

Now, this is an unkindness and an injustice to the child as it is increasingly hard to learn [illegible]. To bring the youth suddenly who has had the [illegible] liberties, and no restraint, when it goes out into [illegible] and finds that its impertinences, far from being thought smart, are viewed with an extreme and if necessary uncomfortable resentment must be intense.

I am not advocating return to the old Spartan discipline of the seventies and before. In my father's time he and his sisters and brothers were not allowed down to dinner till they were grown up, never sat in the presence of their parents without being told to, and were taught to put up with what was handed out to them. Believe me, it was no round of luxury.

In my time such indulgence as maintains among even English boys was unimaginable, and my father never dreamed of sparing the rod. Would to goodness he had lived long enough to complete the education.

The Tragedy of an Ill bred American Boy.

Manners are a simple thing to acquire when one is young, and sometimes impossible later. The motto of Winchester College is not only about five hundred years old, but it is also true. "Manners Makyth Man."

Manners are the traffic regulations of social intercourse. Everybody has got to learn them or have a smashup or fall foul of the police traffic squad. Isn't it far better to learn it on the quiet country roads of youth than in the middle of the city traffic of grown up life?

Goodness knows I am not advocating turning boys into sausages or girls into pigs. Nor do I believe in crushing out individuality in children, but it is possible to gently smooth off the corner of a child's random rudeness where in the case of a young man it needs a chisel and hammer.

I remember as a small boy going with my mother to call on a lady in New York who was a great friend of hers. The lady had a son, a bright lad of about twelve, and she was a widow. My mother told me he had a playful habit of running at ladies and punching them, but that this time she was ready for him. And so it proved.

The moment he saw us come into the drawing-room he uttered a hoot of joy that sounded like a train coming out of a tunnel and bore down on my supposedly defenseless mother. He never quite got there, there was a twinkle and six inches of hatpin were interposed between joyous Jimmy and his victim.

Less than half an inch of it was enough to halt Jimmy and I never shall forget the look of pained surprise on his face before it fell open to let out a noise like a yacht siren gone mad. Little Jimmy was no quitter, though, and the next time my mother called he kindled a nice hot fire under the sofa where the two ladies were sitting. No one was hurt luckily, but the sofa.

I took great pains afterward when I returned to America next time, some twelve years later, to find out what had become of him. Well, it appeared that Jimmy had a sensitive nature—one of that kind that doting mothers think shouldn't be thwarted; so, to spare him the slightest relation of moving with common boys who didn't understand him, he was educated at home until it was time for him to go to college. Then he went to one of your great colleges than which there are no greater institutions anywhere, and what they did to James was a pity.

Now, as I have said, he had no experience in horrid rude fellows so James took it hard. Naturally the harder he took it the harder he got it and it ended in his taking to drink, and he died of red nicce at the age of twenty-three. Of course I don't cite this as a typical American boy; far from it. But I give it to illustrate what may be the result of lack of early discipline.

Some years ago there was a lot of excitement about hazing in American colleges and ragging in the army here. While it was all no doubt very reprehensible, I could not help having a sneaking sympathy with the hazers, and I could not help noticing that the hazed was nearly always a boy who had been brought up at home. It was the chisel being applied where the trowel would have done earlier, before he had begun to set.

In my experience the duration of ragging and hazing is entirely a matter of how you take it and the boy who takes it well is not the undisciplined boy. There is nothing that breeds consideration in others for your feelings as much as having consideration for the feelings of others.

I need not say that this, like every other theory, can be carried too far, and I have seen cases where a boy who afterward became a man, as boys will, was so busy working on the theory of "you scratch my back, I'll scratch yours," that he wore his finger nails away, so to speak, and had nothing left with which to scratch for a living. Still as a general axiom you may take it that you will catch more flies with honey than you will with vinegar.

[illegible] Little by [illegible] Star Company.

The [illegible] healthy boy is and should be as lively and muscl[illegible] as a flea, and is singularly uncomplex. His moral [illegible]s are carried low; later they often rise and are lo[illegible] he head and the heart, but during boyhood mostly [illegible] ations are centred in his tummy, and the seat of [illegible] science is contiguous to the seat of his pants.

And, arising out of this, we come by easy stages to know it is our duty to prevent either from getting torpid and especially the conscience. Directly the boy's conscience goes to sleep, or, as I believe, even dozes, wake it—stir it up—and there is no better conscience rouser than the good old-fashioned trunk strap or its equivalent.

I am told the barrel stave is used with excellent results in parts. The means to the end are immaterial what is essential is that the end should be reached, or otherwise dealt with.

One thing more. One word of warning to the inexperienced spanker. Never embark on your pious task in a temper, or you will do more harm than good. Children, above all other animals, have a deep rooted instinct about justice.

They will take, remember and profit by a licking given for just cause clearly understood, but woe to the father or school master who smites on a thing one does [illegible] he himself is feeling good tempered, and the next day grabs a cane when he's mad, and gets to work. He is laying up for himself trouble in the future and doing the boy no good.

For all the above reasons I call upon the manhood of America to arise in their might and by unearthing the long disused hickory twig, restore to the American home that peace which is the inalienable birthright of the Anglo-Saxon father, and rouse that conscience in the boy while it only drowses, which, if allowed to sink into coma may one day suffer the fate of the suddenly roused somnambulist.

Scientific Expert and Famous Physician-Author.

"W[illegible]?" sang the poet, and [illegible] world mused dreamily [illegible] upon one day some one appointed [illegible] to a cold [illegible] the answer [illegible] they doesn't think at all.

[illegible] naturally wise [illegible] ebbing mouth [illegible] that [illegible] ve him [illegible] sparkle [illegible] flesh and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] find it out.

Why Loud Sounds Cannot Hurt the Baby.

Not only does King Baby neither think, [illegible] nor reason in his earliest months [illegible] hears but he does not even see, or [illegible] or feel, in the ordinary sense of [illegible]. It came as a terrible shock [illegible] baby worshippers when it was discovered by exact and cold-blooded hearing tests nearly thirty years ago that a new-born infant was practically and entirely deaf save to sounds loud enough to shake the walls of the room, until it was [illegible] ten days old.

[illegible] found to be due to the imperfect development of the ear-drum. But the nerve and brain centres concerned [illegible] are even more backward, and [illegible] [illegible] the new arrival on [illegible] pays very little attention to [illegible] sort except when loud and [illegible] [illegible] to startle adults. So that [illegible], as the disillusionment may be, [illegible] of the crooning songs and sweet [illegible] poured into the little pink ear are [illegible] wasted so far as their intended [illegible] is concerned. They don't even [illegible] at one ear and out at the other, or [illegible] up subconscious memories which [illegible] wax and vibrate in later years, for [illegible] ears are blocked. But the crooning [illegible] will probably continue to go on just the same for the sheer joy of it. At least [illegible] is hoped so, even by scientists. Woman, however, extract one small inch [illegible] of consolation, and that is the terrible [illegible] danger of walking the baby by any sound [illegible] louder than a whisper has been greatly [illegible] exaggerated, and the crude and thought-[illegible] male and bubbling, effervescent boys [illegible] girls may be relieved in some measure [illegible] the ever-ready "sch-sch'" and [illegible] tyranny of the guardian of [illegible].

The Ear-Drum Not Working in the Baby.

[illegible] baby has any [illegible] and means, ex-[illegible] the use of a spoon [illegible] of [illegible] a bottle or pitcher. [illegible] months, he [illegible] none of his [illegible] or chrysalis [illegible] makes a noise is [illegible] mother's affair, [illegible] and take warn-[illegible] to get out of [illegible] who never wastes [illegible] anything too pre-[illegible] some child train-[illegible] him to be [illegible] so soft and the [illegible] hollow and filled up [illegible] about as much [illegible] "tight as a drum." [illegible] nerve wires connecting it with the [illegible] and the cen-[illegible] organized and built [illegible], so that it is [illegible] months before sounds [illegible] very definite meaning to a [illegible], then he soon begins to talk. [illegible] of the reasons why he is "dumb" for [illegible] soon after birth is that he is [illegible] to hear himself talk, in [illegible] organize any differences [illegible] sounds except those of loudness [illegible] shrillness.

But surely one sense is well developed in a new baby even within the first week or two after his arrival, and that is the sense of sight. Those bright, luminous eyes of his, with a roguish light in them and their perpetual roving movements right and left, up and down, keenly catching and following every bright object moving before them—surely these are taking intelligent stock of his surroundings and storing up information for future use. But here, again, disillusionment awaits us.

Thousands of most carefully devised tests, repeated with unwearying patience and skill by a score of different experts, have proved beyond question that all a new-born baby can see is light—just light, brighter or dimmer, still or moving, but nothing more. A good deal too much of it for his fancy, poor little mite, during the first two or three weeks, as shown by his tightly screwed-up eyelids and frequent blinking whenever it shines brightly in his face. "It's an awful light world this!" he seems to say.

Baby's Eye Attracted, but He Cannot See.

But [illegible] [illegible] that colored [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the iris, whose [illegible], round, central opening we call the pupil, to cut out all the dazzling as I pass[illegible] excess of the [illegible] rays he begins to [illegible] [illegible] and as we say, take an interest in things, particularly bright or glittering moving objects. Such as a bunch of keys or his father's watch, thoughtfully dangled in front of his face to see if he is really intelligent. And when he actually follows it, and especially when he gets strong enough to move his head slightly after it, wonderful things are prophesied of him.

What has really happened is that the fleeting [illegible] eye has been caught and drawn by the flash of light just as a quivering needle is by a magnet, and then follows it as irresistibly and as involuntarily as a moth flies into a candle, or a mixrating bird into the lantern of a lighthouse. There is no more intention about it than in the compass pointing to the north, or swinging toward a piece of loadstone brought near it. The tiny mite doesn't follow the objects dangling before his eyes because he is interested in them, or go through the motions of paying attention to them because he likes them, but simply because his eyes and the tiny corner of brain that is awake behind them are both that way.

This unconscious "follow-the-glitter" attitude persists for three or four months, and the practical thing to remember is that inasmuch as these movements of "interest" and "attention" are entirely involuntary on the poor baby's part, it is exceedingly easy to overdo it, and fatigue his delicate eye muscles and distress his sensitive nerves, instead of amusing him, still less instructing him in any way.

Fond Parents' Errors About Their Babies' Eyes.

All you have to do is to catch his eye with your glittering "pretty-pretty" and you can drag it backward and forward almost as if you had actually caught it with an invisible gossamer hook and line. To attempt to teach babies under nine months of age, and store their minds with useful images by hanging, or dangling objects of different colors and striking shapes before their eyes, or from the hoods of their cradles or baby buggies, is not merely absurd, but dangerous and hurtful to the verge of cruelty.

A baby cannot possibly have any idea of the shape or outline of an object until he can clutch it and handle it and find out something about it by his sense of touch, and as this is even later in development than either sight or hearing, it is doubtful if he makes any distinction between objects from either their shape or hardness under from nine to twelve months of age.

He clutches at the bright and shining objects mostly before his face because their sparkle attracts him, just as later he will cry for the moon or, like children of larger growth, yearn for the stars. Or more precisely no reason for glittering things just as a new-hatched chick will peck with its tiny beak at any white or light-colored scrap. Not because it has the least idea it is good to eat, or that it is even hungry, but because a spark going in through the eye "explodes" a certain centre at the base of its brain, which touches off the muscles to drive forward the head and neck.

Most unexpectedly, on account of the vividness of colors and the keen pleasure we take in them and expect our children to, the recognition of colors comes even later still. Babies, indeed, have no recognition of colors at all, any more than their own tiny irises show any distinction of color, all being a dull, leaden or slaty blue for several weeks. It is seriously doubted on the basis of thousands of tests whether even young children, grown out of babyhood, have any clear perception of most colors until they are from three to five years of age.

"Oh!" cries some one, "but that is perfectly absurd, for my baby had her favorite flower, her favorite dress or ribbon, her favorite color long before that age." This may be quite true, but the explanation lies in the curious fact that while children seem to enjoy color and will even match skeins of wool or colored strips of paper with a considerable degree of accuracy, what they are chiefly guided by is the brilliance of the colors, that is the amount of light contained in them. Practically most colors can be arranged in a pretty definite and constant order in this respect. For instance, people who are seriously color-blind and cannot even distinguish green from red, frankly declaring that all shades of both these colors simply look "brown" to them, will nevertheless be able to name a good many shades of green, or, as they call it, "light brown," and of red (to them "dark brown") quite correctly, simply by slight differences in the amount of light or brilliancy in the different colors.

So that when young children of five years, or even up to seven, who could recognize and name a good many colors quite correctly, are presented with two shades, say a red and a yellow, or a pink and a blue, with exactly the same amount of light in each, they are utterly puzzled to tell them apart.

This, of course, corresponds with the growth of the mind of the race, most savages know only two colors—red and black, and have no name for any others. Even so highly civilized a race as the Egyptians did all their myriad paintings in practically three colors—red, yellow and black. While those wonders of the world and bugbears of the schoolboy, the ancient Greeks, used the same word for blue and black, and had no clear word for green, the nearest approach being "chloros," which meant greenish yellow. Homer even refers to the sea as "wine-colored."

The practical conclusion from this is that attempts to teach young children under the age of four and even up to five or six years of age to distinguish and name and match colors are, from a biological point of view, time wasted and worse. The little things are practically incapable of making any real distinctions of that sort on other than guesswork or "lightness" grounds, and instead of increasing their intelligence or hastening their development by such tests, we are much more likely to delay and hinder them by fatiguing and distressing them unnecessarily, and interfering with the natural growth of their brain and nervous system.

This is even more true of any attempts at careful comparison or recognition of exact forms and shapes, particularly those of geometric precision. The things which are furthest beyond the recognition and conception of young children are straight lines, such as exist nowhere in nature, and right angles and perfect squares. Only great artists can draw these without assistance, or skilful mechanicians see them, and yet these are unfortunately the very thing which we insist upon teaching our helpless infants both to recognize, to match and to draw at a very early age in their kindergarten or school life. The same is true of the stars and triangles and whirls and other conventional patterns and traceries. Any time spent upon these by young children and most of the time so used up to six or eight years, is more productive of nervous prostration and discouragement and future eye-strain than anything else.

Why a Little Baby Has No Mind.

Naturally these thoroughly proved findings as to the "mindlessness" of a baby's actions and behavior during the first two years and how little conscious seeing and hearing and touching he is really capable of raised the interesting question whether there was anything in the internal construction of his brain at birth and after which would account for his extremely slow development of thought. Great pains were taken to secure as many as possible of the brains of little ones, who had early fallen by the wayside in the march of life, and they were very carefully preserved and prepared and studied under the microscope. The results were surprising even to investigators already familiar with the facts above described.

To put it very roughly, nearly seven-eighths of a baby's large brain at birth was found to be unsettled country, unexplored and uncharted territory. Not merely adoring parents and doting relatives, but hard-headed physicians and impartial scientists had been deceived, partly by the vivacity and charm of a baby's expression and movements, but chiefly by his huge brain and the high brow" expression it gives to his countenance. When he sits "thinking," in calm and brooding silence, he looks as if he were possessed of all the wisdom of the ages.

It was really small wonder that we overestimated his mental power, for his apparent brain equipment, so far as actual bulk is concerned, is something tremendous, five times as great in proportion to his body as ours is in adult life! When we add that a baby's brain grows so rapidly that at two years of age it has reached three-fourths its full size, and at seven years nearly nine tenths as big as it ever will be, we can see that the little chap comes into the world fairly loaded down with brain. But scarce more than a tenth of this "top-heavy" end of him is in working or useable condition at birth, and if he succeeds in getting half of it organized and connected up supplied with telephone and telegraph facilities and railroad or even good wagon-road communications for future intellectual use by the time he is seven he is doing extremely well.

Only the Lower Brain Centres Active in Infancy.

To put it very simply and roughly, the "brain" may be divided into three departments, upper, middle and lower, or upper brain, middle brain and spinal cord. If we were to compare it to a prize chrysanthemum, the upper brain, which is far the largest and fills over three-fourths of our skull easily, would be the flower, the middle brain, the green expanded base on which it rests (calyx), and the spinal cord would be the stem or stalk. Indeed, which is as it may sound, this huge flower, or a dahlia or peony, would give a very fair idea of the proportions of the different parts.

At birth the baby's senses of sight, hearing, taste and touch, his glancing eyes and sprawling, pink fingers and curved lips are connected up only with the spinal cord, and a small portion of the lower brain. So that his actions, animated as they often are, moving his hand away if it strikes something hard or pointed, following bright objects with his eyes, sneezing if a whiff from his thoughtless male parent's cigar wrinkles his little nostrils, smiling if he is skilfully tickled under the chin, are only what we call reflexes; that is, simple responses to light, to smells, to touches, which are "reflected" or flashed back involuntarily from the spinal cord and never get any further toward the brain, so that they are literally brainless in every sense of the term.

As the baby grows and receives more and more messages from his little eyes, and nose, and fingers, and lips, and waves and jerks his little arms about and kicks with his sturdy legs so vigorously but so vaguely, he gradually builds up, wire by wire and plank by plank, a bridge between what he feels and what he can do between his senses and his muscles. The overgrowth of telegraph wires from his spinal cord to his lower brain, through the cerebellum, and as this last is the region where the centres are which control dancing and standing, and walking and running, after five or six months of practise and wire-laying he achieves the triumph of being able to sit up without support, though in a very wabbly and uncertain manner and for brief periods only, and in from ten ten to fifteen months the supreme triumph of standing erect and tottering from one pair of supporting hands to another outstretched to receive him.

Why You Should Not Make Baby Walk Too Soon.

Though he can clutch like a monkey, wrench and kick like a baby elephant and has a back as "strong as a house," it will be utterly impossible for him to use and combine these wondrous powers for standing or walking purposes until the balancing centres in the back of his lower brain or cerebellum have been connected up with his senses and with his spinal cord. Any attempts at "teaching" him to stand or training him to walk further than passively and cautiously seconding his ambitious efforts in those directions when he feels able to make the attempt are irrational and will do more harm than good. When a healthy baby has developed his arms and legs by kicking and strikings, and his lower brain has grown and developed to the point of being able to balance and direct him, he will walk just as certainly and surely as a minnow will swim. Nothing but weakness or under-feeding can delay the accomplishment of the feat, and nothing that is done in the way of training can hasten it by a single month or even week, except perhaps occasionally at the cost of bow-legs and weak ankles and flattened feet. Even exercise for the muscles concerned appears to have astonishingly little to do with it, for Indian papooses, strapped tight to their cradle or carrying-board, and Italian bambinos, swathed to the waist like little mummies in fold after fold of heavy cloth, walk just as early (indeed, usually at a slightly earlier age) as our own children.

More later comes the pushing up of the fibres through the nerve pulp, the blazing of trails through the brain wilderness, to connect a baby's senses and muscles with the upper or small brain. This final process, as shown by the "pencillings" under the microscope of the outlines of the fibres which are to serve as telegraph wires [illegible] [illegible] until the second year is only [illegible] ciently completed for purposes of memory and comparison by about the fifth years and only succeeds in extending it "lines" to all parts of the brain by about the ninth year.

No Use to Hurry the Child's Development.

Hence any attempts to call out really intellectual processes before the fifth year and accurate comparisons or close reasoning of any sort before the tenth will not only fail, but probably do more harm than good. There is no evidence to show that intentional practise of the child's senses—sight, hearing or touch—or formal exercises of his muscles, other than are necessary to keep him in health, have any effect whatever in hastening this ripening and organizing process within the brain itself.

In other words, what a child is mentally at the age of ten, certainly at the age of seven he is by virtue of what he was born, plus good food and plenty of sleep and play and protection from infectious disease. Keep a child healthy and happy and growing and answer half his questions and his mind will take care of itself up to this age at least. He should be allowed to devote his whole time for the first nine years to the serious and important process of growing up. When he gets his whole brain properly grown and organized and connected up he will fairly "eat up" his lessons.

A Modern Witch?

Hereward Carrington, the Authority on Psychic Phenomena, Explains How the Claims of Mrs. Darling, Recently Charged with Witchery in New Jersey, Resemble the Ancient Beliefs in Magic and Black Art

"Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live."

Exodus, Chapter xxii., vs. 18.

DO witches continue to exist? We are accustomed to think of witches as being out of date imaginary beings who existed two or three hundred years ago in the mind of the credulous and superstitious public.

It may come as a shock therefore to learn that our laws against witchcraft still exist in several States, and that only the other day Mrs. Sadie S. Darling, of Newark, N. J., was arrested under the statute covering witchcraft—that is, certainly accused of being a witch.

Mrs. Darling, who is a medium and leader of the First Progressive Spiritual Church, No. 57 Halsey street, Newark, when arrested under the Witchcraft Law of "pretending to exercise or use conjuration, occult and crafty science" to mislead or defraud ignorant persons, said:

"If I am a witch why don't they hang me as they did in Colonial days?"

Indeed, it is strange to him in this day and age that people continue to believe in witchcraft? Our laws seem to show that they do.

Mrs. Darling herself does not consider she is a witch by any means, but only possessing remarkable psychic powers, particular gift or place in spiritualism, and from these she derives her power relative to themselves and from these she derives her power relative to themselves and from these she derives her power relative to themselves

Can Science Develop Monkeys Into Useful Men?

World-Wide Experiments and Studies of Apes, With the Hope of Breeding Servants for Mankind Who Shall Perform Our Drudgery and Distasteful Tasks

An average sized gorilla, showing his enormous girth of chest and brawny-thew muscles. The gorilla has the strength of half a dozen men. He can uproot an average sized tree or break a steel rifle barrel over his knee. If a creature of such muscular power could be taught to work he could do much as much coal as five or six men and could be made to do most of the rough work of the world.

IT was remarkable but not surprising fact that in these times of desperate warfare and struggle for life there should be a noticeable discussion in many parts of the world of the possibility of making use of man's cousins, the anthropoid apes to do [illegible] for the world's rough work.

[illegible] the present can we conceive [illegible] in now useless animal beings in the forests of Africa and [illegible] to humanity's most virtuous labors, thus learning many [illegible] lend the higher intellectual and esthetic life?

How safe [illegible] would be to see one chimpanzee sweeping the streets and the [illegible] reserved for the higher life!

America, France and Germany have all taken steps toward the [illegible] of ape colonies, where the behavior and possibilities of these creatures can be studied.

Yerkes of Harvard, Messrs. Boeving Yerkes, of Harvard, has established a small colony at Montecito, Cal., for the study of ape and monkey behavior. The long and patient labors he has conducted there have convinced him that the apes and monkeys have reasoning powers of considerable value. He is now advocating the foundation of a great colony in the region where he has already made his experiments. In this the apes would be studied from every point of view as to their capacities for learning and would be subjected to experiments with a view to [illegible].

The Prussian [illegible] always ready to promote the most advanced [illegible] of science, has set aside the island of Kos, near Kusaiey, off the west coast of Africa, for use as an [illegible] of [illegible] life. Kohlers of the great Pasteur Institute sent from Paris planned to carry on many interesting experiments there, but their work has of course been stopped by the war.

Dr. Max Rothmann, a distinguished scientist of Berlin, founded a splendid ape colony at Orotava, Teneriffe, in the Canary Islands. He was in a most unfortunate position at the outbreak of war, as he was compelled to cut off from Germany and all supplies. He died in 1916 and it is probable that his death was caused by anxiety at the tragic interruption of his work. His ape colony is now owned on by [illegible] Professor Yerkes thinks but no news has been received concerning it for a long time.

Many of the experiments carried on at these stations, and such recent investigations by scientists, point strongly to the possibility that the ape may be turned into a useful laborer and servant. Nearly all these experiments tend to give a higher position to the meaning powers of the ape than was formerly conceded to [illegible] and we have now learned the idea that the ape, so like man in appearance, [illegible] be also like him in intelligence. When we thus survey [illegible] against the ape when we surmount the difficulties of doing so with such a low, savage, unstrung creature we find that by generations of training the powers of a skilled worker [illegible] of great and unsuspected height than those of any active animal.

The ape has been taught to eat at table like a human being, to wear [illegible] to wash up and down it, to guard a property, to [illegible] to drive a motor car, and to use a [illegible] assistant to write a short story on it.

Scientific Evidence of the Ape's Working Capacities

The ape has apparently the capacity to master human [illegible]. The most curious of Professor Richard Garner with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Science and Our Hair

No 2 of an Instructive Series of Articles for Men and Women on Why the Hair Gets Sick and What Can Be Done to Bring It Back to Health Again

If the Ends of the Hair Are Split, Cut Off All the Split Portions in a Slanting Direction. This Gives the Hair a Tendency to Curl at the Ends.

Always Brush Away from the Scalp, Not on It, Drawing the Brush Through the Hair, Both Over and Under It.

By Frank Parker

In my introductory article last week I did not have space to explain the structure of the hair in order to understand the importance of combing, brushing, singeing and shingling the hair in the right way it is necessary to discuss the physiology of the hair somewhat.

Combing and brushing seem to be so simple as to need no suggestions, yet comparatively few people know how to do it correctly and with the best possible results. The object is twofold—to rid the hair and scalp of foreign matter and to stimulate the scalp, bringing a good circulation of the blood to the hair glands and greater activity. Combing and brushing should be done both morning and evening, and the hair is not so much dirtied as one would think.

In selecting proper combs and brushes usually the best is the cheapest, regardless of price. Two styles of combs should be used, one with coarse, blunt, smooth teeth, wide apart to disentangle the hair, another finer to exercise it. Never force the comb through the hair, breaking it; a little patience will straighten out the tangles. The brush should have strong bristles 2 inches long. It should be used gently and not pressed against the scalp. Always brush away from the scalp, not on it, drawing the brush through the hair both over and under it.

Combs and brushes must always be kept thoroughly clean and sterilized, and should be used by but one person. They can be sterilized by dipping in boiling hot water, then in cold, or any other sterilizing solution such as washing soda in water, carbolic acid, etc. A damp brush laid with bristles down will last longer and keep in better condition.

Experience demonstrates that combing the hair has a tendency to promote its growth. Just why this action is hard to explain physiologically, since all growth is at the papilla, and the hair after leaving the follicle undergoes no structural change that can affect its growth. Seemingly Nature makes greater effort to replace that which has been removed by stimulating more nutriment to the root. One prominent physician advances the theory that a strong growth is stimulated and a weak growth further weakened by cutting. It is very doubtful whether shaving the head under any circumstances is of sufficient benefit to warrant the risk of exposing the tender scalp to climatic vicissitudes, with possible colds in the head or inflammation of the follicles. It tends to make the hair coarser, but does not promote its growth, and it certainly is illogical, since Nature has placed hair on the head for specific purposes.

If the ends of the hair are split cut off all split portions. Always cut the hair in a slanting direction, giving it a tendency to curl at the ends. Never cut off more than is necessary under any circumstances from a wise point of either utility or beauty. Hair cut short on a man's head never looks as well as when cut just enough to remove the ragged ends, and long hair is always preferable, physiologically as well as artistically. Trimming after illness and during convalescence is important, and should be done by one fully understanding what is required.

A great many people and authorities believe there is no efficacy in singeing the hair, and that it serves no good purpose. The experience of hair specialists, however, is to the contrary, as it prevents the hair from splitting, preserving some which would otherwise fall.

The wonderfully intricate and delicate structure of the scalp hair and hair appendages and their interrelated functions and processes, or physiology, would involve a discussion too technical for the present purpose, but it seems advisable to touch upon the subject as nontechnically as possible, to make clear the reasons for what I have just said and will have to say in future articles.

The scalp is the skin of the head from which the hair grows, embracing about 120 square inches. In structure it is similar to the skin of the body, except for the presence of the appendages. It consists of two layers, the outer, epidermis, cuticle or scarf skin; beneath it lies the derma, corium or true skin. The cuticle consists of closely packed cells connected with interwoven tissue, forming a strong and touch membrane, protecting the layer beneath. The corium consists of elongated cells and connective tissue, their fibre interlacing and binding together into an elastic membrane, stretching and following the movements of the muscles beneath, and protecting the subcutaneous cells. These cells are Nature's storehouse for fat and foods for the scalp and hair.

The hair appendages consist of the follicle, papilla and sebaceous ducts and glands, which are most highly developed in the skin of the head; also the sudoriferous glands, blood vessels, nerves and muscles of the scalp, which are similar to those of the skin of the body.

The follicle is a tube-like depression extending in an oblique direction from a sixteenth to an eighth of an inch from the outer surface of the scalp into the inner skin. Through it the hair shaft grows. It is surrounded and supported by two layers of connective tissue, the fibres of the outer layer running up and down while those of the inner run around it.

The papilla is a conical shaped projection of connective tissue inward through the base of the follicle, and is the productive organ of the hair.

The sebaceous glands consist of from two to six sacs, connecting by a single duct with the follicle just beneath the dermis, and covered by a membrane from the skin. These sacs contain cells of varied composition, with clear protoplasm and minute fat granules. These fat cells increase in their contents until they burst open as they reach the ducts into which they discharge their contents, known as sebum. This secretion resembles in its consistency a soft butter, its composition being about three-tenths water, six-tenths albumen and epithelial debris and the balance fat and fatty acids.

This sebum is carried by the ducts into the upper part of the follicle and packed around the hair, protecting the delicate formation from the elements, while the fatty cells are carried into the hair by capillary attraction, and also upon the outside of the hair and scalp, giving the hair its lustre and making its texture soft and pliable. "Black heads" are sacs of sebaceous glands over distended with hardened sebum.

The sudoriferous or sweat glands are elongated tubes about one-fourteenth of an inch in diameter, extending spirally from the surface to the true skin, terminating in a convoluted coil in the cutis. They secrete per-spiration, a fluid containing salt, fatty solids found in bile and gall stones, fatty acids and other compounds. Its reaction is alkaline, but when mixed with the sebum becomes acid, hence is of importance in the consideration of hair condition.

The blood vessels consist of arterial branches surrounding the follicles as a capillary network, and small arterial loops which penetrate the papilla from below, supplying the hair with growing material and pigment for its color.

Nerves have been traced to the follicle, but curiously enough not to the papilla.

Muscles with smooth fibres are attached to the circular layer of the follicles, connecting with the dermis. The erector pili muscle is attached to the follicle below the sebaceous ducts and connects with the dermis at an oblique angle. It is highly developed, and when contracted causes the hair to "stand on end" by pulling the oblique follicle erect.

The hair shaft is that portion extending from the top of the papilla to its point, and is sub-divided into the root, or bulb, and shaft.

The root is that portion contained within the follicle, the lower end or bulb fitting like a cap on top of the papilla. The cell structure at this point closely resembles that of the papilla, but changes gradually to the cornified or hardened condition of the shaft as it ascends.

The shaft is a horny structure closely resembling the nails, but soft and pliable, its contour being oval, circular or flattened. It has three distinct layers, the inside or medullary canal the middle or cortex and the outer or cuticle. The medullary canal extends the length of the shaft to within a short distance of its point, and contains the medulla, a series of superimposed cells gradually changing in their arrangement and structure as the hair rises in the follicle, and as it emerges from the scalp these cells shrivel, leaving air spaces between them. When no more cells are formed in medulla there is a gradually widening space between it and the papilla and the life end of the hair is approaching.

The cortex is a horny tube forming the body of the hair and giving it rigidity. It consists of epithelial cells, closely adhering and strong, containing the pigment or coloring matter. These cells are also formed on top of the papilla and gradually change in structure as the hair rises in the follicle.

The cuticle or protective layer of the hair shaft consists of flattened, translucent, horny scales free from pigment, overlapping and continuing and changing in structure as it is pushed upward into and through the follicle, where it is structurally completed and pushed outward beyond the surface of the scalp.

The length of life of the individual hair varies, depending upon age, sex, general health and other circumstances. It is said to be from 2 to 6 years on the head and on the eyelashes 150 days. Towards the end of its allotted life it is separated from its papilla and pushed upward into the follicle where it remains for some time, attached to the walls, drawing no nutriment from them but in a decreasing degree. It finally reaches a point where it can no longer draw nourishment when it dies and falls out. During this time, the lower part of the follicle collapses, the papilla shrinks and the formation of a new hair is began gradually pushing the old upward.

This explains why there is always a continual shedding of the hair even in normal condition said to be from 17 to 700 hairs daily, and new taking its place, so that the amount of hair on the head is always practically the same. It also demonstrates Nature's wonderful process of repair and renewal, replacing that which has outlived its usefulness and relinquishing on to the old as long as possible while the new is in process of formation. If the old papilla is beyond repair, it also has to go and is replaced with a new one with the new hair.

The uses and utility of the hair are several. Being a poor conductor of heat, it holds and preserves the heat of the body, protecting the delicate organs beneath against rapid changes in temperature. It also serves as a cushion to protect the small nerves and veins. It is also a promoter of beauty, and therefore an adornment when properly arranged.

What Becomes of the Tinfoil You Save

LED by stirring appeals from various charity organizations thousands of persons are "saving tin foil." Not one in five hundred of these collectors has any clear idea of the ultimate use made of this tin-foil. It is known only that among the purposes of its collection is aid in maintaining a Fresh Air Home for convalescents. Glad to help in such a work, contributors go to the trouble of removing and preserving the glistening wrappings that surround cigarettes, certain brands of tobacco and many varieties of candy. It is, of course, realized the material must have a commercial value, otherwise it would not be collected and the first guess naturally is that it is "melted down and used over again."

There would be little puzzle or mystery about the matter were it not for the fact that when one tries to melt tin-foil it instantly turns into a fine brown powder. This has given rise to a belief among many persons who have not pursued the subject further, that the material may be solidified under great pressure and then put to some manufacturing use, though what use it is difficult to surmise.

The truth is that tin-foil is put to but one use—this is the manufacture of solder.

Dealers in metal scrap pay for waste tin-foil sometimes as high as 5¼ and often as low as 3 cents a pound. The best grade of solder is now selling for about 32 cents a pound. Its composition consists of 60 per cent tin and 40 per cent lead. There is also a cheaper grade known as "fifty-fifty" or "half and half."

In buying waste tin-foil by the ton the dealer is obliged to "take his chance" of getting a minimum of tin to a maximum of lead. The foil used by confectioners, for example, contains less lead or "composition" as it is termed, than the foil used by tobacconists.

The tin-foil you are asking goes eventually to the smelting works, where in conjunction with other metal that has been reduced to a molten condition it is brought to liquid form. By cooling and weighing samples of this "broth" its relative proportions of tin and lead can be ascertained. If too heavy, pure tin is added; if too light, more lead, until the proper proportions of these metals for solder is obtained.

Even under the most improved smelting methods there is a loss of about 20 per cent in the oxidation of tin-foil, owing to its inflammability it is therefore no wonder that inquisitive collectors of the stuff have come to the conclusion it cannot be "melted" and have been filled with wonder as to what is done to give it a new commercial value.

New Things Every Woman Ought to Know

My Advice to the Woman of Thirty-five

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri
the Most Famous Living Beauty.

How the Cheek Muscles Are Bound Up to Counteract Their Tendency to Sag

"A Thirty-five," my esteemed colleague in the field of health and beauty culture, [illegible] a woman's [illegible] And at thirty-five [illegible] of the graving [illegible] at the temples above [illegible] at the apex of the head [illegible] to begin to change color. It may only grow a little [illegible] for a little rudder in those [illegible] but a change may be expected. This change heralds the coming of gray hair.

At thirty-five the complexion that up to that time may have kept a pure and white girlishness is liable to cross paths. It is inclined at that age to take on a sallow tint. And it is still more serious, the texture that may have been satin smooth begins to grow coarser.

At thirty-five the thickening or thinning of the figure begins. Heredity does its inevitable work. If you are of a fat family you begin to fatten. If of a lean family you grow thinner.

Women coarsen or refine with age. It is nature's trick to change women to a deathlike semblance or to sprite them into solid coarseness as the years multiply. At thirty-five there appears the first overshadowing of the sort of old [illegible]

It is no danger age of woman. At this age one must redouble the care of her beauty. One must, so to speak, get a her second wind.

To not let this charm vex. Let it merely have the effect of making us more considerate of your beauty, more careful of those special points of loveliness—the handsome eyes, the childlike skin, the graceful figure or the regular features—which nature has given you.

First look to those failing facial [illegible] for they are more surely than wrinkles the betrayers of advancing age. Stand before, or better, sit before a mirror, and make conversation with your reflected self. Notice the tricks of your muscles in speech [illegible] whether you mouth when you talk. It is a most unlovely habit of using the lips overmuch, thrusting them forward when you talk, or twisting them about your words, or drawing the upper lip into small flutelike folds, where wrinkles will be when you reach [illegible]

This fluting of the upper lip is unbecoming and develops ugly lines if you catch yourself forming the habit, rid yourself of it. Practice talking before the mirror until you have learned new management for the muscles, then continue in the new habit.

Cocoanut oil	1 ounce
Italian pink	6 drops
or
Almond oil	1 ounce
Orange oil	2 drops
or
Olive oil	1 ounce
Essence of violet	6 drops

Any of the foregoing oils can be patted into the upper lip after feeding the muscles and plumpening the lip. The cream may be left in the same way.

Spermaceti,	250 grams
Oil of sweet almonds	250 grams
Pure wax,	50 grams
Rose water,	25 grams

At the same time this may be used for freshening and reddening the lip.

Olive oil,	20 grams
White wax,	20 gram
[illegible] anet chips,	3 grams.
Essence of rose,	4 drops

The cheek muscles are prone to sagging, and to counteract this they should be well bound up during a third of our days—that is, every night, which is a third of our day and any other time while we are resting, by a rubber band or a tight muslin one fastened firmly about the chin and pinned or clasped at the crown of the head. This imprisons and makes firmer the muscles that would drop in sleep.

When the profile view discloses a pointed bag of loose skin or drooping muscles it is high time to set to work upon that ugly, age betraying feature with a service able lump of ice. Tilt the chin upward and press the lump of ice which should be smooth, firmly against it, holding it as long as you can bear the cold. Then iron the sagging muscles, moving the lump of ice steadily upward toward the point of the chin.

"Smart" Dresses
By Lady Duff Gordon

A Charming Skirt and Blouse on the New Summer Lines

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishments are at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York, and No. 1400 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

("LUCILE")

HERE I show you four models which really can be called "smart." You will notice that they haven't as bouffant an effect as some—but I believe that for street dress they are probably no exaggerations. The two little dresses at the top of the page are dresses that will be in style almost any season, and yet they are essentially modish now. The larger picture has more of the wider lines than the others. The photograph at the lower right hand corner of the page shows the same dress without the coat.

The tailor-made is the dress which as long as there are women, probably will never lose its popularity. The three-piece dress is, however, becoming more and more popular and this year there is a bewildering variety.

While all the skirts are short and full, all coats are by no means of one character. There is the suit with the Eton or bolero jacket, the one with the hip-length coat and the one that is almost three-quarter long. It is essential that the suit coat should have a very considerable flare, but the best designers have arranged that the fulness shall be massed on the sides and that the back and front shall be left relatively plain.

It is something of a relief to note the predominance of the coat with the flat collar, the rever front and the glimpse of the white blouse thus afforded.

Some of the coats are double-breasted and others have a single line of buttons. Generally speaking, each coat is supplied with its full quota of pockets. These are introduced in a variety of ways, which serve a decorative as well as a practical purpose.

Now that petticoats have been revived, it is a happy thought to have them match the coat lining, or, if the latter is dark, to match the petticoat with the brightest tone in millinery. It is undeniably a season of color, and although one restrains the natural impulse to attune one's sartorial tastes to nature's chromatics, it is quite justifiable to infuse color in the accessories of the street garb.

Belts are an important accessory just now. They come in narrow, wide and intermediate widths, and are made in a variety of fabrics, so that the simple frock, the more elaborate costume or the sports suit may have its particular and correct belt finish.

Antelope leather is considered very smart. It is fashionable in a color rather than in black or in white. Nearly all of the modish shades in silk, in woollen and in cotton have been matched in the colors of the new belts.

There are, for instance, belts of soft mauve, pale gray coral, tan, old blue and some in combinations of these with white or black.

A Walking Costume by Lady Duff-Gordon, Showing One of the New Coats

For dress accompaniment there are attractive sashes, ready made, of flowered or embroidered ribbons, with fringed or tasselled ends. One may buy the ribbon by the yard and make the sash at cost somewhat less than that asked by the shop. Plain colors are always in good taste, since they are less liable to jar with other colors of the costume.
